Abstract

Children's expression of jealousy was studied in a cross-sectional sample of children. In the first study, 56 females and 56 males, ages 4;0-4;11 years, were videotaped while their mother paid attention to another child in a social situation thought to evoke jealousy. In the second study, 10 girls and 10 boys, ages 4;9-7;3 years, were videotaped while their mother praised another child's drawing. We present indications that the emotional state of jealousy can be reliably and validly inferred from the children's behavior in these social settings. Jealousy emerged most intensely in the majority of children between approximately 1.1 and 2.3 years and at

THE EMERGENCE OF JEALOUSY IN CHILDREN 4 MONTHS TO 7 YEARS OF AGE

Mount Saint Vincent University

Children's expression of jealousy was studied in a cross-sectional sample of children. In the first study, 56 females and 56 males, ages 4;0-4;11 years, were videotaped while their mother paid attention to another child in a social situation thought to evoke jealousy. In the second study, 10 girls and 10 boys, ages 4;9-7;3 years, were videotaped while their mother praised another child's drawing. We present indications that the emotional state of jealousy can be reliably and validly inferred from the children's behavior in these social settings. Jealousy emerged most intensely in the majority of children between approximately 1.1 and 2.3 years and at 3.6 years children distinguished between social situations which elicit jealousy. These findings are related to the cognitive-developmental theories of Case et al. (1988) and Fischer et al. (1989).

Beh studies

Empirical investigation of the ontogeny of jealousy has not kept pace with theoretical statements such as those by Fischer et al. (1989), either in terms of delimiting the conditions under which jealousy will be experienced or in terms of describing the behavioral manifestations of this emotional state in young children. Therefore, the two studies presented in this article have been designed to determine whether the emotional state of jealousy can be reliably and validly inferred in a cross-sectional child sample spanning the age range of 4 months through 7 years. Such an empirical investigation and theoretical reflection on jealousy has developmental components. As provided by Bowlby (1966), gives theoretical information concerning

Introduction

The biblical story of Cain and Abel has been passed down from generation to generation as a way to explain the concept of jealousy to children. Cain and Abel were the sons of Adam and Eve. Cain would offer fruits and vegetables to God, so to compete, Abel brought a lamb to be sacrificed to the lord (McDowell, 2015). God started to favor Abel and his offerings. Cain became jealous of Abel, God told him to feel that his brother and not to sin. Cain, however, did not listen and killed his brother in his field (McDowell, 2015). Cain killed Abel out of jealousy. God was disappointed in Cain and sent Cain to live in the land of Nod (McD

Jealousy

Jealousy occurs in many different relationships such as parents (Farrell, 1980), friends (Farrell, 1980), and lovers (Hansen, 1982). Bernard (1977), Bohm (1967), Clanton and Smith (1977), and Mead (1931) have each stated that jealousy is understood as a growing feeling of a person that exists because of jealousy. Jealousy is a complex emotion that he states. Jealousy (Bevan, 2002). Envy is also a negative feeling that occurs when some Jealousy occurs in many different relationships such as co-worker (Shields, 1991), lovers (Hansen, 1982), friends (Farrell, 1980), and family (Gesell, 1906). Bernard (1977), Bohm (1967), Clanton and Smith (1977), Davis (1936), Ellis (1962), and Mead (1931) have each stated that jealousy is understood and learned with growing up, and is determined by the type of person that experiences jealousy (as cited in Hansen, 1982). There are many different definitions of jealousy. Jerome Neu (1980) states that "jealousy is over what one possesses (or has possessed) and the fears to lose. In jealousy there is always a rival, believed, or imagined, but the focus of concern is the valued object" (as cited in Wreen, 1989, p. 635). Jealousy forces an individual to look at another individual as an object or as property because an individual fears that he or she will lose an important person. Emotion is a key component in an individual's understanding of jealousy (Bevan, 2002).

Jealousy

Envy is also a negative feeling that occurs when someone has something or someone that the other person also desires. Kim, Parrott, and Smith (1988) state that
