ON BEING THE DEAN

John F. Kennedy once observed that "to whom much is given, much is required." Since I became Dean of Loyola Law School, I have often reflected on these words of John Kennedy. Over the years, Loyola Law School has been given much — a superb faculty, a first-rate student body, a dedicated staff and, more recently, a wonderful campus. But, if the Law School has been given much, much is required of it in return. How does the ledger stand?

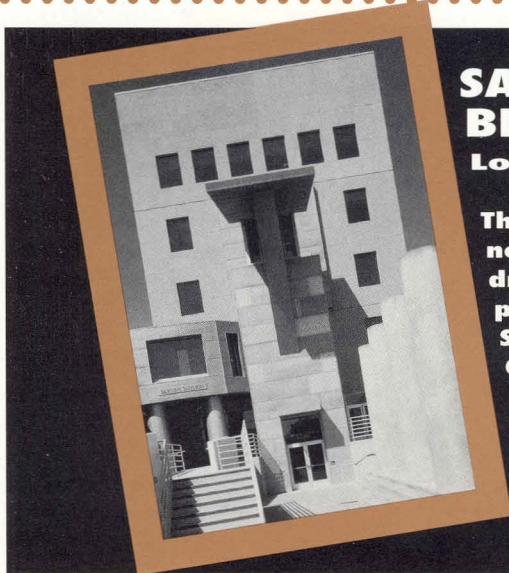

Gerald T. McLaughlin

The ledger will show that we have taken what has been given us, invested it well and returned handsome dividends to the Southern California legal community. The dividends are many.

Since its first graduating class in 1925, Loyola Law School has awarded 10,107 degrees. Over these seven decades, the Law School has been unwavering in its commitment to providing well-trained and ethically sensitive lawyers. The Law School's reputation for

SALE OF POSTERS, SERIGRAPHS TO BENEFIT GEHRY SCHOLARSHIP FUND

Loyola Lawyer Cover Photo to Appear on Poster

The sale of a limited edition of signed, numbered serigraphs of noted Loyola architect Frank O. Gehry's architectural line drawings of the Loyola Law School and an unlimited edition of posters of campus buildings will benefit the Frank O. Gehry Scholarship Fund at Loyola Law School, according to Dean Gerald T. McLaughlin. The cover photo of this issue of the Lawyer is the image for one poster; the other uses a photo of the Fritz B. Burns Building.

The poster and serigraph project will be completed in Spring 1994 and will be introduced in conjunction with the Alumni Dinner and Grand Reunion in May.

competent and ethical legal training is almost unparalleled in the Southern California legal community.

Loyola Law School has reached out to provide a legal education to many who might not otherwise have been able to obtain it. For many years, Loyola was exclusively an evening law school. As anyone who has studied the history of U.S. legal education knows, the legal establishment in the United States did not look kindly on evening law programs. In the 1920s, one prominent legal educator went so far as to comment on the number of "foreign names" in these evening law programs. The entry into the legal profession of these "foreign names" was viewed by some as a threat to the standards of the legal profession. But Loyola, like other evening law schools, persevered in its mission and provided access to the legal profession for many who would not otherwise have had the opportunity. This same mission is now carried forward in both Loyola's day and evening divisions. Today Loyola is proud of the fact that, of the 176 ABA accredited law schools in the United States, Loyola ranks eleventh in overall minority law student enrollment. The Law School's commitment to providing access to the legal profession for those who might not otherwise be able to obtain it has remained constant from 1925 to the present day.

Loyola Law School has also recognized that public service is an integral part of what a lawyer does. The Law School has long provided a wide variety of clinical programs — programs which allow students to work for judges and public interest agencies during law school. Loyola houses on its campus the Western Law Center for Disability Rights — one of the most effective advocates for the legal rights of the disabled in the United States. A second on-campus clinic, the bilingual Center for Conflict Resolution, is scheduled to open in January 1994. As if to underscore its commitment to public service, the Law School faculty voted in 1992 to require all students entering the Law School in Fall 1994 and thereafter to contribute 40 hours of un-compensated legal service to the disadvantaged in our community.

More tallies on the ledger of dividends could be listed, but perhaps those I have mentioned are enough for now. As Dean, I am confident that, in the years ahead, Loyola will continue its commitment both to a quality legal education and to public service.

My confidence rests on one thing and one thing alone — the faculty. In years past, the Law School's spirit and commitment were fashioned by the likes of Father Joseph Donovan, Lloyd Tevis and Rex Dibble. Today, others on the faculty are building upon that commitment in new and exciting ways.

I have often heard alumni/ae say that the Law School is so different today from the way it was when they were students. Obviously, the curriculum and physical surroundings have changed. But I know the commitment of the faculty has not changed and I know the quality of the legal education has not changed. I dare say that most of you would feel quite comfortable if you were a student here today.

I cannot deny that, by dint of office, law school deans are supposed to be relentlessly affirmative in their outlook and relentlessly optimistic in their forecasts. My relentless optimism could be attributed to being dean, but I do not think that is the case. I invite you to come back to the Law School and judge for yourself whether my optimism and affirmativeness are unfounded. If you come, I know that you will leave here as relentlessly affirmative and as relentlessly optimistic about the Law School as I am.

LOYOLA IS PRIME MOVER IN "MAJOR LEGAL DISCOVERY"

What began as a zany idea of Professors David C. Tunick and Christopher N. May has become a zany law review article. The article, entitled "The Law of Prime Numbers," was published by the New York University Law Review, Vol. 68, April 1993. The article, with a technical introduction written by the well-known Harvard University Physics Professor Paul Horowitz, examines the "importance" of prime numbers in the law. A "prime number" is an integer greater than one that is divisible only by itself and one. The first few primes are: 2, 3, 5, 7, 11, 13, 17.

In this pathbreaking scholarly pursuit, the authors have made many remarkable discoveries about the previously unknown relationship between prime numbers and the law. For example, did you know that Helen Palsgraf, of Palsgraf v. Long Island R. R. fame, was 43 years old at the time of trial; or that Sylvester Pennoyer, of Pennoyer v. Neff fame, graduated with 59 classmates from the Harvard Law School?

Prime Loyola Faculty Members Ponder Legal Aspects of Prime Numbers

The article was written by 19 (a prime) authors including Professor Horowitz and sixteen Loyola Law School faculty members (in random order): Daniel L. Stewart, Florrie Young Roberts, Karl M. Manheim, Joseph V. Sliskovich, David C. Tunick, Derek Asiedu-Akrofi, Laurie L. Levenson, Grace C. Tonner, William G. Coskran, Bryan D. Hull, John T. McDermott, Roberta M. Klein, John T. Nockleby, Christopher N. May, Daniel E. Lazaroff, and Theodore P. Seto. Other authors are Wendy C. Satuloff '92 and Loyola student Gregory T. Kavounas '94.

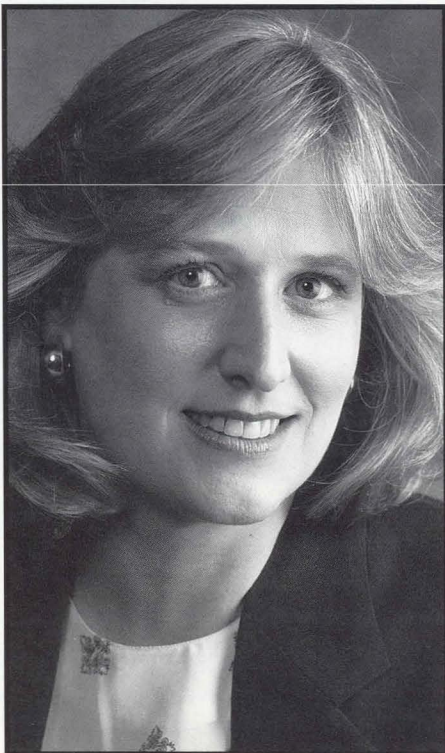

[Eds. note: This article is a not-to-be missed experience. It is great fun — a delightful compendium of legal trivia from the authors' storehouse of legal favorites. If you would like to receive a free reprint, please call the Development Office at (213) 736-1096.]

Joseph M. McLaughlin '55, longtime friend, alumnus and supporter of the Law School, has been named Distinguished Alumnus of 1993-94 by the Alumni Board of Governors. He will be honored at the Alumni Dinner and Grand Reunion scheduled for May 19, 1994. McLaughlin has practiced in Los Angeles for more than 40 years, first with McLaughlin & McLaughlin (with his father and brother as partners) and then for 35 years with McLaughlin & Irvin of Los Angeles and San Francisco (where his son Lawrence J. McLaughlin '78 is one of his partners).

McLaughlin has long represented major California retail food companies, serving as counsel for them in, among other areas, trust funds for pensions and health and welfare funds. In 1970, he brought and successfully argued the landmark case Boy's Market v. Retail Clerks before the U.S. Supreme Court. McLaughlin suspended his practice for six years to serve as President and CEO of Food Employers Council, Inc., where he directed the labor relations of grocery chains and food manufacturers throughout California and Nevada. In his private life, McLaughlin — in addition to taking great pleasure in his seven grandchildren — is an avid history buff and participates in several historical groups, including membership in both the U.S. Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit historical societies. Family members testify that he has read every book in his home library which exceeds 4,500 volumes.

Lori Behar '78 is the first woman in the 33-year history of the Association of Southern California Defense Council to be named President. In another first, in 1985 Behar was the first woman to be named partner in the Santa Monica law firm of Haight, Brown & Bonesteel, where she specializes in legal malpractice litigation. Since that time, four other women have become partners in the 148-lawyer firm. One of Behar's priorities is to become actively involved with the state legislature in support of bills benefiting the Association's membership, particularly in proposals dealing with auto insurance reform.

Theodore (Ted) Stein '73, a senior policy advisor for Mayor Richard Riordan, has been named President of the Los Angeles Board of Airport Commissioners, the citizens committee that oversees the operation of Los Angeles International Airport and three other L.A. area public airports. An active but an unpaid advisor to the Mayor, Stein provides counsel, develops position papers and maintains an office in City Hall. In addition, he is owner of Raider Planning & Construction in Chatsworth and maintains a limited law practice.

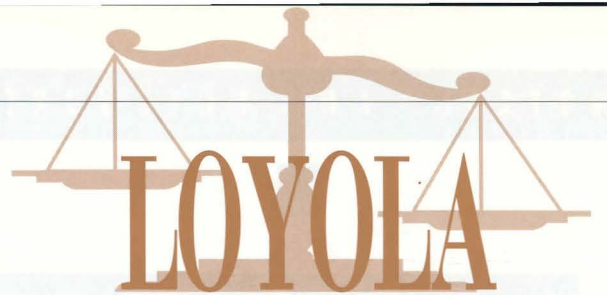

Peter C. Carton '66, who was honored with the State Bar President's Pro Bono Service Award in 1992, was the subject of a profile in a recent issue of the State Bar Report. Carton, a sole practitioner in Bakersfield and the father of six children, was honored for his "outstanding work on complicated pro bono cases in which the court is unable to award custody to a biological parent." According to Barbara Dowdy, coordinator of the Kern County Volunteer Attorney Program, "he undoubtedly provides pro bono legal services to more low-income clients than any attorney in Kern County." In addition to his pro bono work, Carton is one of a group of six attorneys who comprise Schools Legal Service which represents 110 school boards around the state.

Loyola Law School Professor Laurie L. Levenson came to national attention as a media legal expert on the Rodney King Trial. She made numerous appearances on such television programs as the Today Show, Good Morning America, the CBS Morning Show, and the McNeil-Lehrer Report, as well as on National Public Radio and virtually every major Southern California radio station. Levenson's commentary was quoted regularly and extensively in nearly every major newspaper in the nation, including the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Chicago Tribune and the Los Angeles Times. Levenson, who is pictured here in front of the federal courthouse being interviewed by various reporters, continues to be actively sought for her commentary on noted criminal cases.

LOYOLA ALUMNUS PRESIDES IN THE TROPICS

It's not easy serving as the Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands—especially with all the clean air, white sand beaches and crystal lagoons—but someone has to do it. That someone is Hon. Alex R. Munson, who graduated from Loyola Law School in 1975. Since his nomination by President Ronald Reagan in 1988, Judge Munson has presided over the 16 islands, located between Guam and the Tropic of Cancer, which comprise the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

Prior to his current District Court appointment, Judge Munson was the Chief Justice of the High Court of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, an area of 3 million square miles. In addition to his District Court duties, Judge Munson serves as associate justice of the Palau Supreme Court and as a part-time associate justice of the High Court of American Samoa.

The Northern Mariana Islands are a long way from Judge Munson's beginnings in Inglewood, California, but Judge Munson was prepared. At Loyola, Judge Munson studied international law and served for two years as the president of the International Law Society. In addition, when they left for the tropics, Judge Munson and his wife Kathleen were no strangers to travel, as they had twice traveled around the world for a year each time.

The Northern Mariana Islands have a distinct international background with historic ties to Spain, Germany and Japan. Although Judge Munson handles federal matters similar to those handled by a federal district court judge in Los Angeles, the Commonwealth's international background can make for some very interesting diversity cases. "Sometimes the diversity is a Korean citizen suing a Bangladesh citizen and a Japanese citizen, so we might have three interpreters in the courtroom," he says.

One thing that separates the U.S. District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands from such courts in the states is the fact that the U.S. Constitution does not always strictly apply. "We have to consider the Covenant between the Northern Mariana Islands and the United States," Judge Munson says, "so in almost every case there is a question of whether the U.S. Constitution applies or the Covenant applies. In this regard, we're still making law."

One area in which Judge Munson made new law generated publicity around the world. Two years ago, he overruled the Guam abortion statute. "That was probably the biggest and most notorious case I ever handled. It was upheld by the Ninth Circuit and then went to the U.S. Supreme Court where cert was denied."

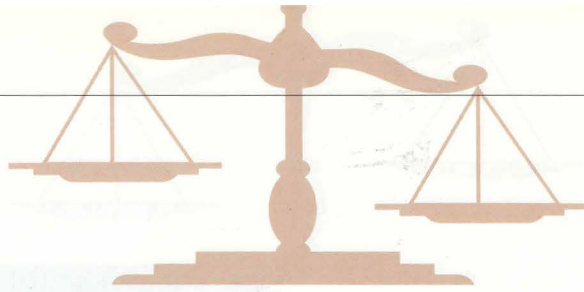

In their free time, the Munsons enjoy snorkeling, scuba diving, wind surfing and barbecues on the beach. And while the food for the most part is Americanized, Judge Munson occasionally samples local delicacies, which might include fruit bat. "It's boiled in coconut milk and eaten hair, hide and everything," Judge Munson says. "I don't particularly care for it, but Judge Alfred Goodwin of the Ninth Circuit has been out here a couple of times, and he relishes it."

Although Judge Munson travels to the states four or five times each year, he and his wife have no plans to return to the U.S. on a permanent basis, and for good reason. "We have made many good friends here among the local people and other expatriots," he says. "We live in a house built in the 1950s by the C.I.A. It's about 1000 feet above sea level and overlooks the Philippine Sea. It's a rather nice place to sit, have a cocktail and just watch the tropical sunset."

LOYOLA WELCOMES THREE NEW SCHOLARS

by Alex Chun '95

In his legal career, Professor John Martinez has tried a little bit of everything. After graduating from Occidental College with a B.A. in 1973 and from Columbia Law School in 1976, Martinez worked for the California Department of Justice, the California Health and Welfare Agency, and, finally, the California Department of Alcohol and Drug Programs. But as Martinez became more concerned with the social implications of law practice, he began to explore other options.

"One of the things that was missing in my life was the opportunity to express myself on the kinds of issues that were important to me," he says. "I couldn't do that in the practice setting or any other setting that I had been in, whereas in teaching the law, you are not only encouraged to speak out, you are paid to do it!"

Martinez was immediately drawn by the study of property law and much of his scholarly research and writing has been in this area. In teaching Property, Martinez deals with the way society defines and selects those interests and expectations that it chooses to protect as property. "Property is an abstraction," Martinez says. "It's not a thing, and it's not a relationship between people and things; it's a relationship among people with respect to assets."

Martinez is currently a tenured professor at the University of Utah College of Law, and is visiting at Loyola for the 1993-94 term on a visit to determine if Martinez will remain at Loyola as a permanent faculty member. Along with teaching first year Property, Martinez is conducting a Takings Seminar which examines the "takings" clause of the U.S.

Constitution. In the spring semester, he will be teaching Future Interests. Before joining the Utah faculty, Professor Martinez was a member of the faculties of both the Santa Clara University School of Law and the University of California at Davis School of Law.

Teaching at Loyola Law School has brought Martinez back to familiar territory and has enabled him to renew old ties. "While I was (practicing) here, I was very much involved in Hispanic politics and affairs," he says. "Clearly there's a lot to do, and if I stay, I hope I can make some contribution to the community."

[Eds. note: Shortly before publication of this issue, Dean Gerald T. McLaughlin announced that the tenured faculty has recommended that Professor Martinez be offered tenure.]

PILEF FESTIVAL AND AUCTION A GREAT SUCCESS

Loyola's newly formed Public Interest Law Foundation (PILF) held its First Annual Fall Festival and Auction on October 9. Organized entirely by students, the event attracted nearly 600 students, faculty, staff and friends to Loyola's downtown campus on a Saturday night and raised more than $20,000 to help support public interest projects.

More than 175 items were donated, including Joe Montana's autographed 49ers helmet, a week's stay in Maui, and a weekend in a Yosemite cabin. The most popular donations, however, proved to be those given by law school faculty members which truly stole the night. Professor Chris May donated five hours of tutoring in Civ Pro and Con Law, which went for $400 and $525 respectively! A group of students paid over $400 for dinner and a movie with Professor Linda Beres. More than 50 professors donated items and/or time. In addition, Professors Beres, Findley, Goldman, Kandel, Lazaroff and Manheim served as highly entertaining auctioneers, contributing greatly to the success of the evening.

Proceeds from the auction will help to support, among other projects, the establishment of the on-campus bilingual Center for Conflict Resolution. Founded last spring by first-year students, Loyola's PILF promotes public interest activities by students and facilitates outreach to the local community.

DOCUMENT EXPRESS SERVICE FOR ALUMNI

Law Library Provides Research Service

For a one-time fee of $15.00, alumni may access material in the Law Library's collection of more than 350,000 volumes and documents by telephoning or faxing requests. Requests will be fulfilled within 24 hours, exclusive of delivery time. Registration in the program also entitles one to request such services as legal cite checking, searches at outside libraries and rush orders. The Law Library subscribes to more than 5,200 periodicals and serials and houses the National Reporter System, all state and federal statutes with accompanying administrative codes, the U.S. Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit Records and Briefs as well as extensive materials in U.S. legislative history. Also in the collection are certain federal and California government documents and a growing list of foreign, international and comparative law materials, e.g., primary and secondary source materials for major jurisdictions of the Pacific Rim, Latin America and Europe. Reference service is also available on weekends. To request a brochure or further information, please call toll-free 1-800-AlumLaw.

Last year while I was a third year law student on Work Study, Dean Gerald McLaughlin called me into his office to discuss a special project for the Development and Public Relations Office. He wanted me to contact scholarship donors and the relatives of memorial scholarship honorees to learn more about the donors, why they made the gift, what was important to them, who they were. The Dean felt it was important for Loyola scholarship recipients to "know" their benefactors and for Loyola to continue to convey its gratitude to those who are forever part of the Law School community.

Loyola Law School is the beneficiary of some 65 scholarships, including 25 memorial scholarships; a few set up to narrate the responses, where and how to publish the information. I realized that I had received what I had expected would be formula data on persons I would never know, but instead were stories about real people who had cherished their law school experiences, friends, professors, and class colleagues.

I learned that Loyola had often opened doors to a fresh direction, career, or interest. I also met and spoke with living LLS graduates who revered a relative or friend, perhaps now gone, who had made law school possible for them through their love and support.

But more touching than any others were the descriptions of Loyola graduates who were adored by their families, admired by their colleagues, whose lives were full and to honor living relatives; several corporate gifts; and about 10 scholarships generated by living donors themselves in tribute to the Law School. As some of these scholarship donations were made many years ago, some of our donor files were sparsely supplied with information or correspondence and tracing the appropriate relatives and or donors was time-consuming and often frustrating.

I began the sometimes complex task of reaching relatives and donors and sending cover letters and questionnaires. Some people were warmly receptive, welcoming the opportunity to chat about their loved ones or their Loyola experiences. Others were busy but concisely cooperative. A few quickly qualified their commitment: while they could collaborate, they could not donate! After I clarified our intent, most of them agreed to help us.

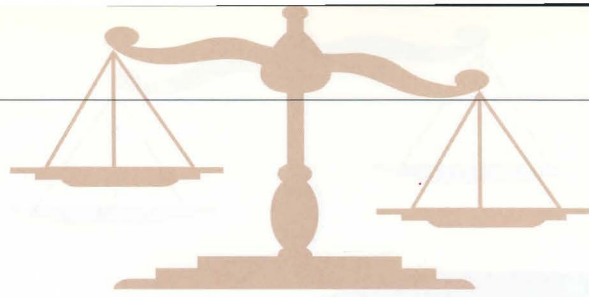

At first, I was unsure what to do with the questionnaires, how generous and exciting until mercilessly cut short. I was truly unprepared for the writings I received, for the intensity of emotion and love these questionnaires had engendered. To learn about Loyolans who had achieved so much was poignantly sorrowful, yet inspiring.

I have now completed the task of documentation, but the process has had an unexpected effect on me. Until I spoke to past graduates, read letters from relatives, and learned why particular alums were so revered by their classmates, I didn't realize the breadth of the impact three years at Loyola Law School have made on my life. Like others of my fellow recent graduates, I was often frustrated by late grades, boring cafeteria food, tedious assignments, and irrelevant exams. But now I have graduated and gone on to begin the work for which I came to Loyola to prepare. I find myself feeling fear, excitement, worry, enthusiasm, sorrow,

LINGUISTS

by Peter Tiersma, Associate Professor Loyola Law School

A linguist is an expert on language. Contrary to popular usage, linguists are not people who speak many different languages; such a person is properly referred to as a polyglot, although obviously a linguist may also be a polyglot, or vice versa. Yet it is quite possible for someone to be an expert on language while not being able to speak other languages very well. And many polyglots may dazzle listeners with their ability to switch from one language to another, but may not, on a conscious level, understand how language operates.

The past decades have seen an increasing interest in how law interacts with other disciplines¹, although the study of the language and law is really only beginning². More than virtually any other profession, however, lawyers are concerned with language. All attorneys are, in a sense, bilingual. They speak not only ordinary English, but also legal English, which to the uninitiated seems like a language unto itself. And lawyers use language continually—it is the primary tool of the legal profession. The typical practice consists of little besides speaking, reading and writing. Furthermore, legal professionals—especially judges—not only use language, but are often called upon to analyze it, thus essentially functioning as linguists by making language an object of study. When interpreting statutes or other legal documents, for example, lawyers and judges may attempt to articulate rules or principles—such as the canons of construction—that explain how legal language operates.

In the rest of this essay I will leave aside more esoteric scholarly concerns, and concentrate primarily on how practitioners have used or could use linguistic expertise.

“Attorneys are, in a sense, bilingual. They speak ordinary English as well as legal English, which to the uninitiated seems like a language unto itself.”

One of the most obvious areas where language and law interact is in the interpretation of legal documents, including constitutions and statutes, contracts, wills, and so forth. Efforts to use linguistic experts in this area have met with mixed success³, even though it is evident that such expertise might shed some light on difficult issues.

For example, the United States Supreme Court was recently confronted with what it means for an accused to “use” a firearm during the commission of certain offenses⁴. The defendant had not brandished or even carried a firearm for protection during the commission of the crime, but rather had traded it for drugs. The Court held that the statute’s reference to “using a firearm” included any conceivable use that one might make of a firearm during the commission of certain crimes, and was thus not restricted to its use as a weapon. Because the defendant paid for the drugs with a gun rather than by some other means, and because the gun happened to be equipped with a silencer, he received a sentence of thirty years imprisonment.

A linguist would have been able to point out that to “use” something, without further explanation, is normally interpreted to mean that the object is being applied to its intended purpose. To say “she uses illegal drugs” or “she is a drug user” can only mean that she smokes, sniffs, injects them, etc. If she uses the marijuana as compost in her garden, we need to add this critical information, lest we make ourselves subject to misinterpretation and a defamation suit.

AND THE LAW

Likewise, if I say that "I used my car to get to San Francisco," I communicate that I used my car as a means of transportation, because that is a car's ordinary purpose. If in fact I sold the car to buy a train ticket, my statement was misleading by leaving out this important further detail, even though the statement might be true on a strictly literal level⁵.

In the criminal context, linguistic expertise is relevant in a number of ways. A controversial means of establishing the recorded making what are alleged to be incriminating statements. This is especially true in prosecutions for bribery, solicitation, conspiracy and the like, which linguist Roger Shuy has called "language crimes" because they are typically committed by means of language⁷. A common problem with such evidence is that juries often tend to give great weight to taped conversations, and often interpret them quite literally, in contrast to how conversations normally operate.

Consider, for example, the following exchange:

A: "And then we killed him."

B: "Uh-huh."

A conversation almost exactly like this one was once offered as evidence that B was involved in killing someone⁸. One problem here is that "we" is ambiguous in English; it can refer either to A and B, or to A and a third person. Thus A's statement does not necessarily implicate B. Furthermore, B's response ("uh-huh") is also ambiguous. In reply to a question that calls for a yes/no answer, "uh-huh" is indeed an affirmative response, and can therefore signal agreement. For example, if I ask "Do you want to see a movie tonight?" and you respond with "uh-huh," you have agreed to go. But "uh-huh" is also what is called a feedback marker, which you can use to signal to a conversational partner that you are listening and have processed what she said, without indicating agreement. If I tell you that yesterday I went to the mall, your responding "uh-huh" means no more than that you follow what I said; it does not necessarily mean that you already knew that I went, or that you agree that what I said is true.

Thus in response to "we killed him," the word "uh-huh" may identity of speakers who have been recorded on tape is what is often called a "voiceprint," based on spectrographic analysis. Obviously, the branch of linguistics called phonetics—the study of sounds in language—has a great deal of experience in analyzing human speech, and a number of phoneticians have played central roles in the discussions regarding the reliability of voiceprint identification⁶.

An increasingly common type of evidence in criminal cases is audio or videotapes of conversations in which the accused is

FACULTY

The Law School received very good news in early November. The Fritz B. Burns Foundation has continued its remarkable generosity to the Law School by awarding Loyola a $250,000 Challenge Grant. The purpose of the grant is to encourage alumni contributions to the Law School. For every two dollars contributed by alumni, the Fritz B. Burns Foundation will award the Law School an additional dollar. Over the past two years, Fritz B. Burns Foundation Challenge Grants have resulted in a 150% increase in the number of alumni/ae contributing to the Law School.

On November 1, 1993, Loyola Law School opened an on-campus Center for Conflict Resolution. The Center will concentrate on mediating disputes in both English and Spanish for residents of the First Supervisorial District of Los Angeles. Professor William Hobbs, the Director of the Center, is a former adjunct professor and a well-known Los Angeles-area mediator. Marta Gallegos will oversee intake and outreach to the community.

Funding for the Center was provided by a $43,000 grant from the County of Los Angeles and a generous $86,000 grant from the Ralph M. Parsons Foundation, which is payable over two years. The Law School is making an in-kind contribution of space and equipment for the running of the Center. The Center will provide much-needed clinical opportunities for Loyola evening students and will add to the growing roster of Loyola public interest activities in the Los Angeles Community.

Mary Chaney, official courtroom artist for the Rodney King Trial, graciously allowed 38 of her colored sketches of the trial to be exhibited in the William M. Rains Law Library. The exhibition, entitled "Justice on Trial," formally opened on August 11 with a reception at which Loyola Professor Laurie L. Levenson, Artist Chaney and Defense Lawyer Harland W. Braun, reminisced about the trial and commented on Mary Chaney's faithful and powerful drawings.

COMMUNITY

Hon. Christopher Weeramantry, Judge of the International Court of Justice (otherwise known as the World Court), visited Loyola Law School on October 18 and addressed a faculty luncheon on the workings of the International Court of Justice at the Hague. Judge Weeramantry was recently elected to the Court for a 14-year term. Prior to his work on the World Court, the judge had a distinguished career as a jurist in Sri Lanka and as an academic in Australia. Judge Weeramantry is also the author of a distinguished treatise on Contracts.

COMMUNITY

NYU Economics Professor Andres Velasco presented a public lecture at the Law School on "Free Trade for All the Americas? Going South After NAFTA," a discussion of the future of Free Trade Agreements in South America if NAFTA is approved. Professor Velasco was invited to be a Distinguished Visitor at Loyola by the faculty International Programs Committee as part of its ongoing effort to create international faculty contacts and exchanges. Among those attending the lecture and reception that followed were members of the Chile-California Chamber of Commerce, Loyola alumni, academics from other law schools in the Los Angeles area and others interested in the free trade issue.

Just prior to returning to full-time teaching at NYU, Professor Velasco served as Chief of Staff to the Chilean Minister of Finance in 1990 and 1991 and served as Director of the Ministry of Finance's International Trade and Finance Division in 1992. Velasco's father, Eugenio Velasco (a former Dean of the University of Chile Law School) and Professor Velasco's entire family were political exiles during most of the Pinochet years.

Professor Michael Wolfson's videotape project designed to aid in the teaching of legal ethics, "Professional Responsibility in Practice" (funded by the W.M. Keck Foundation), is receiving wide acclaim. Since the project's completion in early fall, more than 100 law schools in the United States and Canada have requested and received copies of the videotapes and accompanying teacher's manual. Professor Wolfson has received word that the project will be featured in Legal Video Review, a newsletter published by the Media Library of the Social Law Library in Boston. The newsletter is distributed nationally to law libraries, law schools, bar association libraries, and law firm libraries.

Attention Environmental Law Enthusiasts! The National Association of Environmental Law Societies is organizing the Seventh Annual National Conference to be held at Loyola Law School and Pepperdine University School of Law on Friday and Saturday, January 28th and 29th. Among topics to be covered are legal issues of air and water pollution; land use and toxins litigation; the Endangered Species Act; environmental justice; international environmental policy, etc. Up to eight hours of California approved Continuing Education Credit is available for attorneys attending the conference. For more information, call Eleanor DeLashmitt, Director of Educational Programs, at (213) 736-1000.

Councilman Mike Hernandez, of Los Angeles' First Council District, addressed the student body in an outdoor forum on October 18 in the Oak Tree Quad. The address, sponsored by the Student Bar Association, was entitled "A Naturalization Problem...Not An Immigration Problem."

Councilman Hernandez at Loyola.

ELLEN P. APRILL's article, "Caution: Enterprise Zones," has been published in the Southern California Law Review. She has been named First Vice-President of the Tax Section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association.

DEREK ASIEDU-AKROFI Professor Asiedu-Akrofi recently lectured on "Debt Reduction in International Loan Negotiation" at the International Law Institute in Washington, D.C.

ROBERT W. BENSON recently published "The Threat of Trade, The Failure of Politics And Law, And The Need For Direct Citizen Action in the Global Environmental Crisis" in the Loyola of Los Angeles International & Comparative Law Journal. "NAFTA's Faultlines: Side Agreements Won't Fix an Already Flawed Treaty" was printed in The Christian Science Monitor. His symposium on "Mexican Elections, Human Rights & International Law: Opposition Views" was also published in the Loyola of Los Angeles International & Comparative Law Journal.

BARBARA BLANCO chaired the "Intergalactic" Coalition of Los Angeles-area ABA Law schools to promote pro bono opportunities for students.

JOHN O. CALMORE's article "Spatial Equality and The Kerner Commission Report: A Back-to-the-Future Essay" was published in North Carolina Law Review. Professor Calmore also wrote a contemporary response based on critical race theory to Lon Fuller's 1949 jurisprudential essay in the Harvard Law Review, "The Speluncean Explorers" which appeared in the George Washington Law Journal. During the 1993-94 academic year Professor Calmore met with HUD Secretary Henry Cisneros and other legal services and public interest lawyers to discuss issues related to fair housing enforcement and implementing the goals of national low-income housing and community development programs.

JAN C. COSTELLO recently presented "They Just Don't Get It: What is it that 'they' just don't get?" and served as moderator at Loyola Law School's First Friday Forum panel discussion entitled "Beyond Respect: Toward True Gender Equality in the Workplace." In addition, Professor Costello published "Rejuvenation — How to Reform Juvenile Court," in the October issue of the California Lawyer.

ROGER W. FINDLEY recently published the 1993 Supplement to his co-authored textbook, Cases and Materials on Environmental Law (3d edition). During the past year, Professor Findley was a guest lecturer at the UCLA School of Engineering and at Cambridge University in England. He also served as an advisor to the Office of the President of Colombia on possible revisions to Colombian law concerning environmental citizen suits and class actions.

CATHERINE L. FISK served as lead counsel in Lâm v. University of Hawaii, No. 91-16587 (9th Cir.), a Title VII suit against the University of Hawaii Law School. She also delivered a paper entitled "Lochner Redux: The Renaissance of Laissez-Faire Contract in the Federal Common Law of Employee Benefits" at the Annual Meeting of the Law and Society Association in Chicago and at the Annual Meeting of Social Science History Association in Baltimore. Professor Fisk also spoke on "Recent Developments in Gender Discrimination Law," and served as a member of the panel at Loyola Law School's First Friday Forum panel discussion entitled "Beyond Respect: Toward True Gender Equality in the Workplace."

EDITH Z. FRIEDLER's recent work, "El Acoso Sexual y La Norma de la Mujer Razonable," will be published in Spanish in Chile by the Instituto de Estudios Judiciales and in Argentina by the University of La Plata School of Law Journal. Professor Friedler delivered this paper at the 30th Conference of the Inter-American Bar Association held in Santiago, Chile on "Sexual Harassment and the Reasonable Woman Standard."

JENNIFER FRIESEN's keynote speech "Adventures in Federalism: Some Observations on the Overlapping Spheres of State and Federal Constitutional Law" — recently delivered at Widener University School of Law — was published in Widener's Journal of Public Law. Professor Friesen also published the 1993 Supplement to her treatise State Constitutional Law: Litigating Individual Rights, Claims, and Defenses.

STANLEY A. GOLDMAN gave the BarBri lectures at both McGeorge School of Law and Boalt Hall in October to prepare students for the November MPRE (the Ethics Bar).

BRYAN D. HULL recently published "Forward: 'Is The UCC Dead, Or Alive And Well?'" in the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review Commercial Law Symposium and "Division 6: Bulk Sales," in Sales & Leases in California Commercial Law Practice. Professor Hull also serves as the Chair of the Article 2 Subcommittee of the California State Bar UCC Committee.

LISA C. IKEMOTO recently published "Traces of the Master Narrative in the Story of African American/Korean American Conflict: How We Constructed 'Los Angeles,'" in the Southern California Law Review. Professor Ikemoto is a member of the Organizing Committees for the Southwest/Southeast People of Color Scholarship Conference and the Western People of Color Scholarship Conference, and she is a member of the LSAC Minority Affairs Committee.

KURT T. LASH served as moderator for the on-campus 1993 Religious Freedom Forum on the Proposition 174 Voucher Initiative.

LARY LAWRENCE's article "What Would Be Wrong With a User-Friendly Code?: The Drafting of Revised Articles 3 and 4 of the Uniform Commercial Code," was published in the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review. In addition, Professor Lawrence coauthored a two volume series entitled Uniform Commercial Code Series on revised Articles 3 and 4 with William D. Hawkland.

DANIEL E. LAZAROFF's article "Torts and Sports: Participant Liability to Co-Participants for Injuries Sustained During Competition," which appeared in the Univ. of Miami Entertainment and Sports Law Review, was recently cited in the book Sports & the Law (West, 1993) as "the best scholarly treatment of the legal issues posed by these cases." Two other articles, "Antitrust and Sports Leagues: Re-Examining the Threshold Questions," which appeared in the Arizona State Law Journal, and "The Antitrust Implications of Franchise Relocation Restrictions in Professional Sports," which appeared in the Fordham Law Review were also cited in the same book.

Laurie L. Levenson recently published "Divide and Conquer' The Admissibility of the Briseno Videotape in the Federal Rodney King Beating Trial" in the Los Angeles Lawyer. Professor Levenson served as a panelist on "Human Rights and the North American Free Trade Agreement," at the University of California at Davis School of Law in September of 1993. She also served as the Moderator for the ABA White Collar Subcommittee's program on the "Rodney King Case," and for a seminar on "Lawful Use of Force: Jewish Perspectives." In addition, Professor Levenson was a panelist at the California Judicial Counsel Conference on the Media and the Criminal Justice System and a speaker at Sidley & Austin's "King Trial" retreat.

KARL M. MANHEIM's recent article, "The Business of the California Supreme Court," was published in the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review.

CHRISTOPHER N. MAY's op-ed article, "The Joys of Pro Bono," was printed in the Los Angeles Daily Journal and the San Francisco Daily Journal.

THERESE H. MAYNARD has recently published several works including "Section 12(2)'s Availability to the Defrauded Secondary Market Buyer," which appears in Insights; "Another Perspective on the SEC's Market 2000 Study," also published in Insights; "The Affirmative Defense of Reasonable Care Under Section 12(2) of the Securities Act of 1993," which is printed in the Notre Dame Law Review; and "The Future of Securities Act Section 12(2)," published in the "Securities Law Symposium" issue of the Alabama Law Review. Professor Maynard also delivered a talk entitled "Working Parents in the Workplace," and served as a member of the panel at Loyola Law School's First Friday Forum panel discussion entitled "Beyond Respect: Toward True Gender Equality in the Workplace."

JOHN T. McDERMOTT recently published "The Use and Abuse of Affirmative Action Programs in the United States" in Human Rights, "Protection of 'Persona' in Intellectual Property Law, and "Gray Market Imports" in Commerce & Finance. Professor McDermott also presented these papers at the LAWASIA Conference in Colombo, Sri Lanka in September.

GERALD T. McLAUGHLIN's "The Evolving Uniform Commercial Code: From Infancy to Maturity to Old Age," appeared in the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review, and his work "Standby Letters of Credit and Guarantees: An Exercise in Cartography," was published in the William and Mary Law Review. Dean McLaughlin serves as the American Bar Association Advisor to the Uniform Commercial Code Article 5 Drafting Committee. He also made a presentation on Letters of Credit to the United States Council on International Banking (USCIB) at its Annual Meeting.

JOHN T. NOCKLEBY presented a paper entitled "Are Tort Remedies Useful in Addressing Hate Speech?" at the annual meeting of the Law and Society Association in Chicago. During the 1993-94 academic year, Professor Nockleby is a Visiting Professor of Law at Harvard Law School.

SAMUEL H. PILLSBURY's op-ed article, "The INS Gives Us All a Bad Name" was published in the August 5, 1993 issue of the Los Angeles Times. Professor Pillsbury was recently interviewed for the Arts and Entertainment network show "American Justice" concerning his work on evil in the law of murder.

SANDE BUHAI POND recently published "An Overview of the Americans with Disabilities Act 'ADA'" (with Susan Schwartz) and "Access to the Courts for Persons with Disabilities" (with Kevin Martin) in the California State Bar's Legal Services Section Newsletter.

DAN S. SCHECHTER's "Comments on Selected Portions of the March 1993 Version of the Heflin-Grassley Bankruptcy Amendments Bill," appeared in the California Bankruptcy Journal. Professor Schechter also spoke to the Commercial and Bankruptcy Section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association on "Recent Developments in Commercial Law."

LAWRENCE B. SOLUM's recent work includes the 1993 Supplement to his textbook Destruction of Evidence; "Constructing an Ideal of Public Reason," an invited paper which appears in the "Symposium on Politics and Religion" issue of the University of San Diego Law Review; "Alternative Court Structures in the Future of the California Judiciary," published in the "Symposium on the Future of the California Judiciary" issue of the Southern California Law Review; and "Equity and the Rule of Law," an invited paper which appears in the American Society for Political and legal Philosophy's Nomos XXXVI: The Rule of Law.

DANIEL L. STEWART taught a two-week course on "U.S. Property Law" to Chinese graduate students at University of International Business & Economics, Beijing, China in the Spring of 1993.

JON H. SYLVESTER was a Fulbright Professor with the Faculty of Law at the University of Nairobi, Kenya during the 1992-93 academic year. He also conducted seminars with government officials and lectured in several African countries on the subject of international debt.

KATHRYN W. TATE served as a trainer for a presentation of the American Arbitration Association's program, "Advanced Training in Commercial and Construction Arbitration."

PETER M. TIERSMA recently published an article entitled "Linguistic Issues in the Law," in Language: Journal of the Linguistic Society of America. In addition, he has three articles forthcoming. "Nonverbal Communication and the Freedom of 'Speech'," will be published in the Wisconsin Law Review, "The Judge as Linguist," appears in a recent symposium issue of the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review. Professor Tiersma also published "Lokale markeardens yn it Frysk" in Tydskrift Foar Fryske Taalkunde.

DAVID C. TUNICK's "Legal Advice for a Company Hiring Computer Programmers from Another Company" appeared in the Rutgers Computer and Technology Law Review. During the past year, he served as an Arbitrator with the American Arbitration Association on Computer Law Cases, and was a member of the Editorial Advisory Board for the Computer Law Journal. He also served on the Executive Committee of the California State Bar Intellectual Property Section, Computer Law Division. Professor Tunick also served on an American Bar Association panel which advised the Hungarian government on computer crime issues.

MICHAEL E. WOLFSON recently wrote and produced a program comprised of two instructional videotapes and an accompanying teacher's manual to assist in the teaching of legal ethics. The project, "Professional Responsibility in Practice," was financed by a grant from the W.M. Keck Foundation and is being distributed to law schools in both the United States and Canada.

Mary Shelley's Frankenstein is definitely not the most conventional law school text, but according to Associate Professor Lisa Chiyemi Ikemoto, who uses the classic novel in her Law and Medicine course, it makes perfect sense. "I use it because the course is not just law and medicine," she says. "You can use literature because literature is often about moral dilemmas. Frankenstein is a good way to develop themes in the course about the relationship between scientists and society, and the relationship between doctor and patient. It is also a chance for me to use my English major."

Ikemoto graduated from UCLA in 1984, majoring in English and History. She later received law degrees from UC Davis (J.D., 1987) and from Columbia University (LL.M., 1989). Since Ikemoto has such a strong background in the liberal arts, she is frequently asked why she decided to teach Law and Medicine as well as Bioethics. "You don't have to have a science background. Bioethics is largely about philosophy, ethics and sociology, and I enjoy the interdisciplinary nature of it."

Bioethics was also the class that started Ikemoto toward a career in academia. While taking the class at UC Davis for her senior writing project, she found that she enjoyed writing and research, which later proved fortunate as her first teaching position was instructing Legal Research and Writing at Albany Law School. "I liked working with the students," Ikemoto says. "When you are teaching legal research and writing, you really have the opportunity to develop a relationship with students."

As a Sansei, a third-generation Japanese American, Ikemoto brings a unique perspective to Loyola. Her research is largely centered around the themes of gender and race, which according to Ikemoto, "are areas in which I have an interest because of who I am." Along with her interest in bioethics, she has also begun to focus on intergroup conflicts. "I'd like to try and develop an Asian-American studies focus for scholarship. There are others who also are working in this area, but not very many of us."

In addition to Bioethics, and Law and Medicine, Ikemoto will teach Family Law and a Family Law Seminar in the spring. Ikemoto also hopes to develop the Health Law/Bioethics curriculum beyond that which presently exists. "Since we are in Southern California, there is a great deal of medical research going on," she says. "I think that many big firms are adding health care sections, so it is possible that we can help students tap into that."

In her free time, this San Gabriel, California native likes to get together with old friends and "just hang out." Ikemoto also enjoys going to movies, plays and concerts and a substantial amount of her time will now be spent working on her new home in Pasadena.

For some people, the road to law school is a super-highway, straight and direct. For others like Associate Professor Kurt T. Lash, however, side streets replete with pit stops are the pathway. Lash grew up in New Mexico, and his first stop was Whitman College in Walla Walla, Washington, for a degree in psychology. "I went just for the adventure," he says. "I didn't have any idea where Walla Walla was except for Bugs Bunny cartoons. I didn't even look at the map before I left home. I just drove north in my Volkswagen van with my guitar and really didn't look at where I was going until I hit the Washington State border."

That guitar became a very important part of Lash's life. After graduation from college, he embarked for the next six years on a musical career. He played at folk festivals, toured colleges and universities, and ultimately ended up in Europe. "I even did the guitar on the street, 'throw your money in my guitar case' thing," Lash says. "You have different standards when you're a starving musician. You just need enough to buy bread." Then Lash was married and had a child. "I have a very wonderful, supportive marriage with Kelly," he says. "She was more than willing to support me while I explored music. I had fun for a while, but then I said, 'enough, time to get a real job.'"

After a stint selling books for Time-Life, he attended the University of New Mexico School of Law. He found a supportive environment and many there encouraged him, and in fact, encouraged him to transfer to Yale Law School where he received his law degree in 1992. He accepted a position with Gibson, Dunn and Crutcher, where he worked on RICO and environmental issues. "I was prepared to work with Gibson, Dunn and it turned out to be sooner than later," Lash says. "I'm very blessed to have received this position because it's extremely difficult to go into teaching right now." At Loyola, Lash will teach Law and Religion as well as Constitutional Law I and ECN.

When he's away from his desk, Lash still keeps up with his music — which he describes as a cross between Tracy Chapman and Randy Newman. Lash has also passed his musical genes to his five-year-old daughter, Katherine, who knows how to strum and use a pick, and to his one-and-a-half-year-old son, Nathaniel, who has "definite percussive abilities."

"Since we are in Southern California, there is a great deal of medical research going on," she says. "I think that many big firms are adding health care sections, so it is possible that we can help students tap into that."

LOYOLA'S LAW REVIEW MAKES SIGNIFICANT STRIDES

by Thomas M. Riordan '94*
Editor-in-Chief,
Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review

For better or worse, a law school's law journals significantly affect how those not affiliated with the school form opinions about the quality of the institution, its students, and its graduates. Other than by interacting with alumni — which may have the greatest potential for creating positive, lasting impressions — most others know of a school only through its legal periodicals. Since exposure to our alumni and Loyola's journals are among the most effective ways to improve the profession's perception of Loyola, it seems clear that our alumni and the current journal staffs need to know more about each other.

I would like to re-introduce you to the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review. Now in its 27th year, the Law Review is continuing to evolve into an important and well-regarded legal periodical. One way of judging its success is by monitoring the frequency of citation. We have recently begun to use electronic databases to monitor citations. While the numbers have yet to be finalized, we appear to be averaging between twelve and fifteen citations each month.

Another way of judging success is in considering where our publication is being cited. Citation in a judicial opinion is considered particularly important because it means that the Law Review has had a direct hand in shaping actual case law. Two recent examples are Meinhold v. U.S. Dep't of Defense, 808 F. Supp. 1455 (C.D. Cal. 1993) and Privette v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. 4th 689 (1993). We are particularly proud of these two mentions because in both cases the court cited a student-written comment.

Finally, a third measure of success is the quality of the professional authors the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review publishes. Our most recent "best seller" was the April 1993 issue which contained a symposium entitled "Is the UCC Dead, or Alive and Well?" Twenty-one of the most influential scholars in the field, including several of those who are heavily involved in revising the code, were published in the issue. This symposium was so successful that we plan to publish a follow-up UCC symposium featuring essays from prominent practitioners in the field.

Future issues will consider current aspects of bankruptcy law and a symposium on the "Law and..." (related issues) movement. Also featured will be an essay by Professor Laurie L. Levenson on her experiences as a media legal expert during the Rodney King Trial. Her article will be accompanied by full-color selections from the powerful and moving sketches of the trial by official courtroom artist Mary Chaney now on exhibit in the William M. Rains Law Library. Further, the April 1994 issue contains yet another symposium featuring the work of top academics and practitioners on the future of federal environmental law.

and elation. The experience of memorializing these donors, has made me focus more keenly on my own reminiscences of the education, my friends, and my experiences of Loyola Law School.

I have included a few examples of the material gathered which illustrates the breadth of the responses I received from several of our scholarship donors.

- Board of Governors President David Chodos '66 established a memorial scholarship in the name of his father, Reuben Chodos, who had owned a sandwich shop on the land on which the Casassa Building now stands. David worked in the shop as a child. When Loyola moved from Grand Avenue to the current location, Rube's Sandwiches moved to Alvarado Street and many students dropped in before class. The Rube Chodos Scholarship award is a ham sandwich and a scholarship.
- Lee Norman Bradley '83 died a few short years after graduation and practice in a prestigious law firm. He loved the study of law intensely and was fierce about his love for Loyola Law School. Lee also loved the outdoors, hiking, skiing, and had begun flying lessons before his illness. He was very talented musically, composing romantic songs at the piano and was a sensitive and loving son who enjoyed the company of his family. The scholarship gift was inspired, according to his mother Gloria, by "Lee's respect for Loyola, the compassion and interest that his professors had for him during his illness, and their help along the way."

- Thomas Keiser '76 wondered what he could do to honor his mother in a meaningful way. She does not like gifts. As he felt that her moral support had been crucial to his success in law school, he decided to do something to help students that would honor his mother. Several years ago, he established the Ida B. Keiser Scholarship out of gratitude to her for helping to make his career possible.
- Louis N. Mantalica '41 grew up in a gold mining town in South Dakota from which escaped via college athletic scholarship. During the Depression, he departed for California and decided to become an attorney. He called on Loyola's then Regent, Father Donovan, who, after listening to his story, said he would arrange a loan and take a chance on him. After four years of evening school, Lou remained active and enthusiastically involved in the practice of law for 40 years. According to his wife Kay, he influenced several others over the years to consider the profession of law. He believed in single-minded concentration on achieving a goal –or what he called 'desire.'

- Kathleen Elaine Kinzer '81, worked in a law office during the day and went to Loyola Law School at night, graduating with honors. She was bubbly, enthusiastic, and energetic - - she organized every class party during her law school years. She loved life and fun, and in her short life was a licensed scuba diver, licensed hot air balloonist, avid mountain hiker, excellent swimmer and sports person, accomplished singer, and violinist. Kathy believed strongly in the Sierra Club and women's rights and usually supported the 'underdog.' Kathy was one of a kind, worked hard in everything she did, and never let herself get discouraged. She was an optimist to the core, a caring, thoughtful daughter, and is deeply missed by her family and friends who established a scholarship in her name.

Are You Hiring Loyola Students and Grads?

Let Us Help You!

You can render no greater service to your Law School in today's challenging job market than to target Loyola Law students and alumni when you have a job opening. Here are some of the services Loyola's Office of Career Services provides to employers throughout the year.

- Free Job Listing Service: Listings for part-time and full-time law clerk, graduate and attorney job openings are taken daily via telephone, letter or fax. Job listings are posted and reviewed on a daily basis by students and alumni.
- Quick Work™ Job Listing Service for Temporary and Project Work: This free service is provided for employers seeking immediate and/or temporary law clerks and attorneys. Posted listings are also made available via the Law School's electronic bulletin board for immediate access by students and are highlighted in the biweekly job listings mailed to participating alumni.
- Attorney Job Bulletin: A summary of graduate and attorney job listings is mailed biweekly to participating alumni.
- On-Campus Interviews: Employers may participate in the annual Fall (September/October) and Spring (March) On-Campus Interview programs or schedule on-campus interviews at other times during the year. The Office of Career Services publicizes interview dates, collects and forwards student resumes, and coordinates interview schedules for employers.
- Alumni Referral Service: Employers may request direct referrals of participating alumni for specific job openings.
- Send Resumes/Collect Resumes: Employers who choose to interview in their offices may request that the Office collect and forward student resumes or have students send resumes direct.
- Employer information on file: Employer files are maintained for any employer who wishes to place firm resumes, NALP forms, etc. on file for student and alumni review.
- For more information, contact: Carol Ross-Burnett, Assistant Dean, Office of Career Services, Loyola Law School, 1441 West Olympic Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90015-3980. Telephone: 213/736-1150; Fax: 213/380-3769.

indicate merely that B understood what A said, and that A can continue with the story. What looks at first glance like evidence of guilt turns out to be highly ambiguous.

Linguistic expertise can be valuable in the civil arena also. In trademark law, for example, it is often critical to decide whether the sound pattern of two marks is confusingly similar. For example, how close is the pronunciation of the call letters WMEE to WMCZ? Will speakers of American English pronounce "Avita" similarly to "Aveda"? Are customers likely to confuse "Lebow" with "Lebole"? Linguists clearly have something to say on these issues.

Other questions that arise in this area include when a name becomes an ordinary word, as when the Earl of Sandwich immortalized himself by having a slab of meat placed between two slices of bread. Linguists are interested in these matters because one aspect of their professional field is how new words enter the language, as well as how proper nouns (names) differ from common nouns (ordinary words). Obviously, companies whose trademarks or product names are in danger of becoming ordinary words (as with Coke or Xerox) have not only an intellectual curiosity, but also a substantial monetary stake in this question.

Linguists have not only participated in the judicial process as experts (in these and many other ways), but have also critically examined the role of language in the legal process, often making some unexpected discoveries. For instance, one study of how divorce lawyers talk to their clients has shown that they tend to emphasize the significance of people (particularly judges) over a system of rules, that they often describe judges as "arbitrary" and suggest to clients that the outcome of cases depends on the litigant's ability to pay, and that in general lawyers seldom defend the legal system¹⁰.

While the study concentrated on divorce lawyers, there is no reason to suppose that its conclusions are not—at least to some extent—representative of the profession as a whole. Such research may be quite relevant to understanding the often negative public image of the legal profession. While the occasional bad apple is part of the problem, as is the fact that lawyers must often defend unpopular clients and causes, another contributing factor seems to be how lawyers themselves talk about their profession. Of course, attorneys who make these sorts of comments to clients are not intent on lowering the image of the profession, but perhaps hope to justify their fees or cushion their clients against the possibility of an adverse decision—"It wasn't any shortcoming on my part that caused you to lose your case; that judge is just a loose cannon." Unintentionally, however, they undermine confidence in the legal system as a whole.

The processes of transcription and translation also create interesting issues. Legal proceedings are generally transcribed into what is often termed a "verbatim" record of the proceedings. Litigators are doubtless aware that court reporters may leave out awkward "uhs" and similar space fillers, but they might be surprised to discover some of the other changes that can occur during transcription. Anne Graffam Walker, a former court reporter who has studied that profession, has noted that reporters frequently eliminate false starts and correct grammatical errors in the speech of judges and lawyers¹¹.

While this is commonly justified on the ground that only the testimony of witnesses is evidence and hence inviolate, a witness's response in many cases client or poor judicial temperament.

Interpreted proceedings raise similar issues, one of which also relates to the reliability of the record. Typically, the sole record of an interpreted proceeding, and certainly the only official record, is the English transcription. As a consequence, the record technically reflects what an interpreter said, not what the witness said.

At present there is no established procedure for dealing with inaccuracies in translation. With the ever-increasing diversity of the population, particularly in Southern California, proceedings in

PETER M. TIERSMA, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR

Prior to attending law school, Professor Tiersma was named a Fulbright Fellow to the Netherlands and taught linguistics at both UC San Diego and Miami University of Ohio. While in law school, he was Associate Editor of the California Law Review. Professor Tiersma served as law clerk to Justice Stanley Mosk of the California Supreme Court and was in private practice with the law firms of Pettit & Martin in San Francisco and Price, Postel & Parma in Santa Barbara before joining the Loyola Law School faculty in 1990. He writes on the relationship between language and the law.

Professor Tiersma's publications include: "The Language of Perjury: 'Literal Truth,' Ambiguity and the False Statement Requirement," 63 Southern California Law Review 373 (1990); "Rites of Passage: Legal Ritual in Roman Law and Anthropological Analogues," 9 Journal of Legal History 1 (1988); and "The Language of Defamation," 66 Texas Law Review 303 (1987).

makes sense only in light of the examining lawyer's question. Suppose that a witness replies "yes" to a poorly worded question by a lawyer; "correcting" this ungrammatical question may conceivably create a record in which the witness responds to a question that was never actually stated in exactly those terms.

Walker also observes that the court reporting profession actually encourages "the change or transposition of a few words" to avoid a judge's "crude and blundering expression," although it is not supposed to change the sense of what was said¹². I am not sure how prevalent this practice is. Yet if a reporter interprets this mandate broadly enough, he may end up obscuring evidence of bias against your which at least part of the testimony is interpreted are increasingly common. Perhaps in light of this, the courts should develop a means for allowing litigants, if they desire, to monitor the accuracy of such proceedings. For example, taping interpreted proceedings would permit reviewing the accuracy of the interpretation at some later time.

A more prevalent translation problem occurs when legal language must be rendered into ordinary speech. All lawyers confront this issue when they attempt to explain the law to their clients in terms that they can understand. An attorney who simply quotes a statute without explaining what it means is generally not serving that client very well.

The law has traditionally done an especially poor job of translating legal language into ordinary speech during the process of instructing a jury. Many studies have shown that jurors do not understand their instructions very well and have recommended ways in which comprehension can be improved¹³.

Nonetheless, most lawyers and judges seem to have little idea how poorly many instructions convey relevant legal concepts to jurors. In the recent trial of several defendants accused of beating Reginald Denny and others during the civil unrest in Los Angeles, the jury's questions to the judge revealed a lack of understanding of some key legal concepts, even though the jury was given a written copy of the instructions. For example, the jurors at one point inquired whether they could consider the contents of the closing argument as 'evidence'¹⁴. They later asked the judge: "Does 'or' mean 'and'; does 'likely' mean 'it did occur'; and should we take into consideration 'intent' even though it does not appear in [a] particular element [of a charge]?"¹⁵

While the inherent complexity of the law is surely one reason why jurors often fail to comprehend the law, the use of unfamiliar legal terminology and convoluted prose is surely equally at fault. In a study some 15 years ago, the research team of Robert and Veda Charrow subjected California's standard civil jury instructions (BAJI) to close scrutiny¹⁶. Their investigation revealed that most subjects could not properly paraphrase many instructions, often leaving out critical legal concepts. Interestingly, the California Supreme Court recently disapproved a longstanding instruction on proximate cause, rejecting the notion that long usage guarantees instructional adequacy, and explicitly referring to the Charrow's study¹⁷.

But despite efforts since then to simplify the language of the California instructions, some real gems of obscurity remain. Consider this admonition in BAJI 2.21: "Innocent misrecollection is not uncommon." The concept that this instruction tries to convey is not particularly difficult: people sometimes honestly believe they remember something, but are simply wrong. Still, when I asked a class of around fifteen intelligent law students to paraphrase it, they had great difficulty doing so.

While progress in this area remains limited, some states and the federal courts have indeed made significant improvements¹⁸. Perhaps it is time for the bar to become more involved, since ultimately the legitimacy of the jury system depends on some measure of confidence that jurors are capable of accomplishing what we ask them to do.

My last example of how often language issues commonly arise in the legal setting comes from a case in which I had some involvement while in practice. As I recall it, our clients were engaged in the business of electrical design, and had done some work on a planned condominium development. Just before commencing work, the developer met with the architect and discussed certain changes. At one point, they called our clients on the speaker phone and asked something like, "Can you modify the electrical design to allow for electric ranges in the kitchens (instead of gas ones)?" Our clients replied that they could. Several months later the project ground to a halt when it was time to do the electrical work and the designs had not been changed to reflect the increased load caused by all-electric kitchens. The developer sued both the architect and our clients for the ensuing delay.

As far as our clients were concerned, they had never been instructed to make any modifications to their design. Observe that the critical issue is what it means to ask someone whether he "can" do something. If a mother at the dinner table asks her son, "Can you pass the salt," she is obviously not just asking him whether he can do so, but is telling him that he should. It is obvious that he can pass the salt, so he can infer that his mother really wants to communicate something else—that he should actually give it to her. This is what "can you do X" often means, and it is apparently how the developer understood it.

When, on the other hand, it is not clear that you can do something, a question whether you "can" do it will normally be interpreted in its literal sense—as a question about your ability. So if an employer asks a job applicant "Can you handle a chainsaw," he is not saying that she should do so, but is really asking whether she is capable of doing so. This, of course, is how our clients understood the request: they stated that the design could be modified to allow for an all-electric kitchen, but never agreed to do so.

By now, it should be evident that linguistic issues arise in virtually all areas of the law, and it is important to be attuned to them.
