Definitions

A bibliography is a list of sources (books, journals, web sites, periodicals, etc.) one has used for researching a topic. Bibliographies are sometimes called "References" or "Works Cited" depending on the style format you are using. A bibliography usually just includes the bibliographic information (i.e., the author, title, publisher, etc.).

An annotation is a summary and/or evaluation. Therefore, an annotated bibliography includes a summary and/or evaluation of each of the sources. Depending on your project or the assignment, your annotations may do one or more of the following:

- Summarize: Some annotations merely summarize the source. What are the main arguments? What is the point of this book or article? What topics are covered? If someone asked what this article/book is about, what would you say? The length of your annotations will determine how detailed your summaries is.

What is an Annotated Bibliography?

- A bibliography is a list of resources cited in a consistent style format (such as MLA).
- An annotation is a brief evaluative summary of a book, article or other publication.
- An annotated bibliography, then, is a list of cited sources with brief explanations centering around one topic or research

FIELD NOTES AS DATA

TYPES OF NOTES

A. Mental Notes/head notes:

- What can you remember?
- When do you not take notes?

B. Jotted Notes

- What should I write down?
- Date, place, keeping track of time.
- Music, decorations, tables and chairs, lights
- People: when they come and go? What they are wearing?
- Are they coming in as individuals, groups, both?
- Interactions between people who work there?
- What emotions and attitudes are present?
- Interactions between people who work there and the people who come in.
- Field notes: Neatness does not count for much, but they should be readable
- Capturing the concrete.
- Capturing real talk versus paraphrasing what you thought you heard
- Changing days and times of observations
- What happens when someone sees you taking notes?
- What they might do? Then what do you do?
- What are YOU experiencing or feeling? Nervousness? Disgust? Joy?

C. Full Field notes

- Going home with your jotted notes and elaborating.
- How long should I take field notes?
- Going back and forth between field notes and interviewing

Five academic journals!

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY: After choosing a topic and having the topic approved, you will narrow the topic. Then you will find five academic journal articles on the topic (published before the year 2010). You will discuss each of the articles in terms of criteria that I will provide (e.g., before the year 2010). This assignment is related to "information literacy" and "critical thinking" (2000-2015 (5 articles related to topic)).

ARGUMENTS PAPER: This paper will focus on five academic journal articles (the same ones used for the Annotated Bibliography; but maybe not the same ones) you will write (a) identifies the types of arguments that each of the five journal articles uses, and (b) those articles, you will provide examples of those arguments. This paper will all use the same information from the various articles. Criteria will be provided. You hard copies of each of the articles. This is a very important assignment. The more each journal article will include your preliminary identification of articles, as well any doodles you are inspired to make. (See Workbook)

LITERATURE REVIEW: Your argument, based on previously published academic journal articles, to our narrowed topic. This paper will draw on your previous work (if you have done any) on your Arguments paper. Your synthesis of previous research creates an argument about a narrowed topic that leads to your asking a specific Research Question. Remember: your argument should answer the research question; you are making an argument that justifies asking the research question; the paper is a justification for your asking the RQ. (See Workbook)

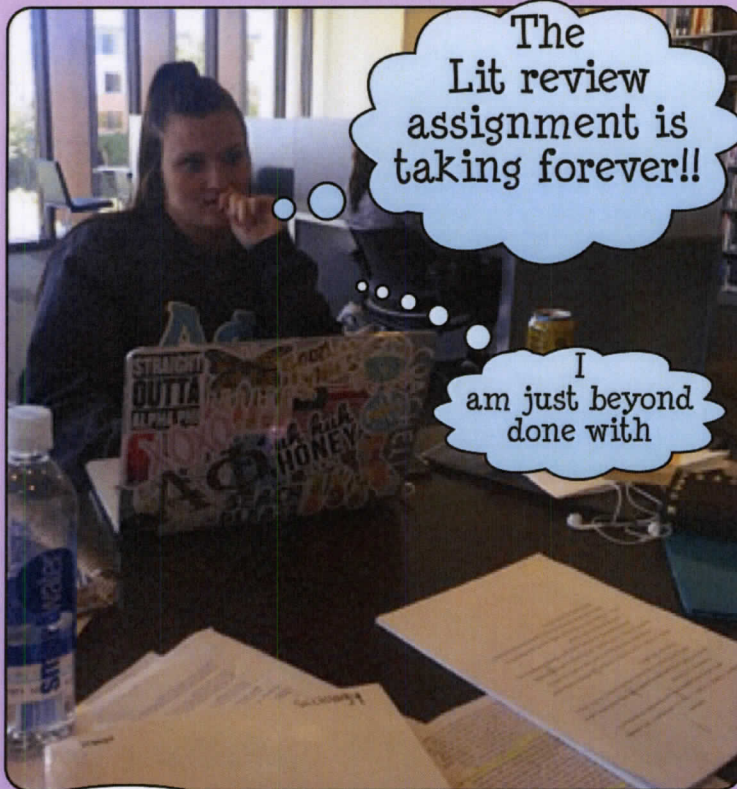

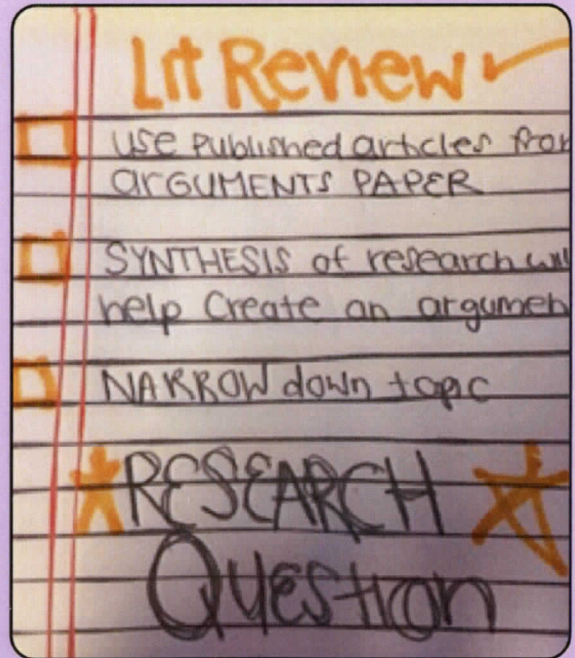

SURVEY CONSTRUCTION: You will construct or adapt a Likert-type survey instrument that will use to collect data related to the topic of your literature review. (See workbook)

Social Medias Influence on Relational Jealousy

Genevieve Murphy

CMST 204: Into to Research Communication

Professor Dean Scheibel

April 11, 2016

Impact of Social Media on Relationships

Regarding the influence of social media in romantic relationships, that emotions will be brought up ranging from suspicion, determination, and all place into categories of cognitive, emotional and behavioral jealousy.

Social Media Maintenance

Cognitive jealousy directly relates to the level of trust one has in their partner. If something seems suspicious, a partner may begin to worry or doubt.

Social Media and Jealousy

Unlike previous generations lack of online exposure, this generation's platforms are slowly taking over all methods of communication. As a result, social media has become a major factor in relationships.

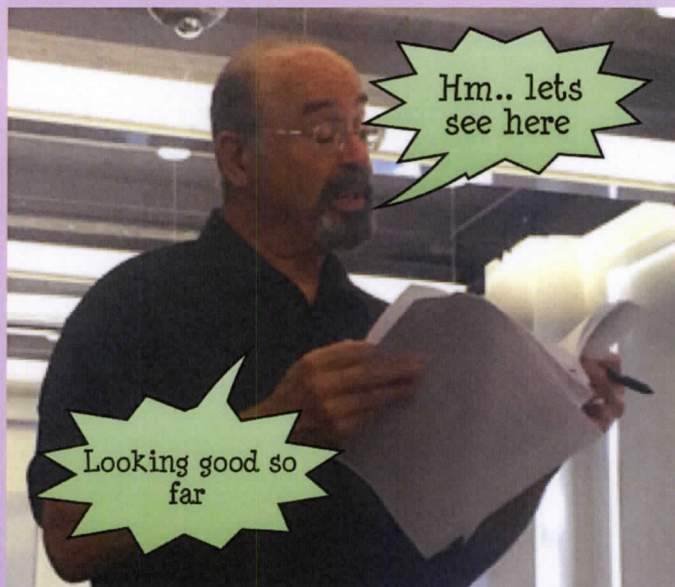

RESEARCH QUESTION

Does the maintenance of social media presence increase cognitive jealousy?
