Abstract

This updated listing of words that are often confused by spell checkers is the most downloaded article among my works and those at my university. After 5 years, it has been frequently revised and added to with more than a thousand new words.

Spell checkers in writing programs and communication devices may change a written word to an unintended one and may provide auto completion as well. The writer or reader may note that a piece of work may be free from red (misspelling) or green (grammar/syntax error) underlining, but the wording may not be as intended. Likewise, the reverse may be true with the program flagging correctly written text. While dictionaries and lists of spelling demons, homonyms, and homophones exist, the following are a culling of words that spell checkers and auto completion programs may confuse. Each word is associated with a relevant related word to resolve ambiguity with eye toward both noun and verb usage, and unlike a dictionary is better regarded as a thesaurus. While yielding to the more common word, the pairings are usually alphabetically ordered by the word's sound then by nouns then verbs. Because some spell checkers allow multiple generally acceptable spellings, the preferred spelling is presented herein. While casual misuse is understandable, many of the listings herein have been observed as errors in student work, colleague communications, and in the media. Generally not included are vulgar words as well as abbreviations including those used in chemistry, physics, commerce, and foreign exchange. American spellings are used herein which include endings of: -am, -ense, -ize, -or, and -ter instead of British endings of: -amme, -ence, -ise, -our, and -tre. Generally, a single consonant after a vowel or a terminal silent e makes the single vowel prior to the consonant long in pronunciation, and it is “i before e except after c or before g.” Some proper and trade names and foreign words are shown if they are the same.

Generally adjectives ending in -ic are denotative (what it is), internally defined, or characteristic while words ending in -ical are connotative (what it is about), externally defined, or exceptional; nouns may end with -ic or -ics, adverbs with -icly or -ically. Consider: cleric -al, comic -al, cubic -al, economic -al, electric -al, ethic -al, heretic -al, historic -al, magic -al, mathematic -al, mystic -al, philosophic -al, psychoanalytic -al, rhetoric -al, statistic -al, theatric -al, topic -al, tropic -al, etc., where “the historical theatric presentation” is a drama set in the past, but “the historic theatrical presentation” is a noteworthy florid oration. On the other hand, there are those that do not easily receive such treatment, e.g. acrobatic, artistic, athletic, caustic, democratic, dramatic, eclectic, ethnic, fantastic, ironic, magnetic, majestic, monotonic, pubic, political (politic is either proper or a verb), realistic, sardonic, sarcastic, sonic, and toxic; there are also those which can be used as nouns: academic, cleric, comic, epidemic, esthetic, heretic, medic, mystic, psychic, psychotic, public, radical, relic, statistic, and topic.

Commonly mispronounced words include: accreditation ac-cre-di-ta-tion, amateur a-ma-teur, banal ba-nal, denunciation de-nun-ci-a-tion, epitome e-pi-to-me, etcetera et-ce-ter-a, harass har-ass, homogeneous ho-mo-gene-ous, hyperbole hy-per-bo-le, integral in-te-gral, intelligentsia in-tel-li-Gen-tsi-a, interest in-te-rest, kiln kil(n), lackadaisical lac-ka-dai-si-cal, machinations ma-Ki-na-tions, medieval me-di-e-val, mischievous mis-chie-vous, naïveté na-ïv(e)-té, nuclear nuc-le-ar, pronunciation pro-nun-ci-a-tion, regardless re-gard-less, renaissance re-nais-sance, unionized un-i-o-nized [chemistry] or u-nion-ized [work], and zoology zo-o-lo-gy. There is a difference between as and like. Use as when followed by action (another verb or function); use like -s as a verb denoting a preference or otherwise for comparisons. The comparative usage is never followed by another verb (save gerund nouns—“There are things that always makes me happy, like walking the dog” versus “...as when I walk the dog.”).

Thereafter follows a style sheet noting that different versions exist among various fields and publications. It is offered here in recognition that writing programs often do little to correct notational styles.

Style Preferences

Proper nouns (things that are unique) are capitalized including the names of days and months, but seasons (winter, spring, summer, fall/autumn) are not unless used as proper nouns (This year the Spring Festival will start in winter). This usage contrasts to German where all nouns are capitalized versus say French where adjectival proper nouns are not (une voiture américaine). Generally a title for a person's position is not capitalized unless part of a proper name (president of the United States vs. President Lincoln). Title and heading conjunctions and prepositions are often not capitalized (and, or, but, in, on, of, against, under, ...) unless it is the first word with a heading normally taking no punctuation, no underlining (unless secondary), nor italics (unless tertiary). A heading should start the next page if nothing would appear below it on the same page.

Subject noun and verb agreement regarding singular and plural is de rigueur in English; in the third person, non irregular forms have a terminal s on either the subject noun (plural) or the verb (singular) as in the car runs vs. the cars run. Superlatives should be unmodified, but consider from the U.S. Constitution: “In order to form a more perfect union.” Preferred spellings exist for: abridgment, acknowledgment and judgment (not -dgement), as well as for: collectible, compatible, convertible, and deductible (not -able). Consider the following past tense words with double terminal consonants: cancelled, conferred, deferred, inferred, preferred, occurred, and referred but offered and traveled.

Multiple adverbs and adjectives take a hyphen between related words (two-year multiple course disciplines), [verb]-[preposition] takes a hyphen when used as a noun (shake-down, strike-out, break-up), as well as the written numbers between twenty-one and ninety-nine. Writing programs often convert two hyphens to a dash (–) and is appropriate for an explanation. Common abbreviations include e.g. (examples), i.e. (namely), and NB (note well as in a footnote). Superscripts are used in mathematical expressions and as citations to footnotes or references (<sup>1</sup>); subscripts are used for differentiated variables (A<sub>1</sub> vs. A<sub>2</sub>).

Counted small integer numbers are properly spelled out as words; sizes are properly expressed as numerals (three 2 ounce packages). Pagination uses lower case Roman numerals for a preface and Arabic numerals thereafter. Use a decimal point (.) in numbers for proportions less than one and commas (,) between thousands, but not for years; this differs from some European notation which may reverse these or use spaces for thousands; U.S. billion and trillion may be European milliard and billion respectively. Ordinal numbers (can be treated arithmetically) are written in Arabic characters (3, 1647, etc.); cardinal numbers (nominal or not subject to arithmetic treatment) are written in Roman numerals (III, MDCXLVII, etc.). Educational degree award dates and dates of publication take brackets [2011], employment periods take parentheses (from- to). Parenthesis usage is nested as ( [ { ... } ] ) for written words and mathematical expressions. Non original parenthetical remarks within quotations take brackets; a common non original parenthetical remark is “[sic]” denoting an uncorrected literal quotation. If a quotation is preceded by a full sentence, place a colon (:) between them. If a quotation is preceded by a verb, place a comma (,) between them; if preceded by “that” for an indirect quotation then no quotation marks are used. While subject to variation, punctuation should end within the closing quotation mark (“), (!”), and (?”) if in the original; note that others including Jeopardy! place these marks (“?”) after for titles. Names of books and publications are italicized (formerly underlined) as are foreign and new words or for emphasis. Bold font may be used to denote important words.

The opening and closing quotation marks properly appear as inverted versions of each other (“...” with single versions (‘...’) for quotations within a quotation (British practice is reversed). Double spacing is preferred between sentences (and avoids confusion regarding terminal abbreviations)—likewise two spaces precede post/zip codes and follow after colons (:) and before the start of a list. Commas (,) separate all listed items of three or more (...colleges of Baltimore, William and Mary, and Dover); semicolons (;) separate closely related sentences and they separate greater lists from lesser lists. Spacing between ellipses (...) and initials (U.S.) may be omitted. Symbols (% and $, €, or £) are used in tables, but in a sentence are properly spelled out (percent and dollar -s, or euro -s, or pound -s). The apostrophe (’) appears before the s for possessives and after for plural possessives (Jones’ vs. Joneses but St. James’s Place). Numbers receive similar treatment (the 40s or ‘40s) while notable decades are spelled out as proper names (the Twenties, the Sixties). References list citations; a bibliography may contain additional references. Styles vary significantly, but a generally accepted one is to present them alphabetically not indented, by author’s last then first name, coauthor’s first then last name(s), title in quotation marks, publication in italics, date of publication in brackets, then publisher and location or volume/edition number, date, and pages therein with unnecessary commas being generally omitted. Internet sources should provide similar information if available and the URL. Examples are:

Author, First, “Title” Journal Name Vol. 1, No. 2 [Month, 2012] pp. 1-10
