Reading 1911: Librarians Explore the Centennial

What were people reading during this time when William H. Taft was our president? When the U.S. population was 93,863,000, there were 46 stars in our flag, the cost of a first-class stamp was only $0.02, and the U.S. was crossed by plane for the first time -and it only took 50 days!

Each month during LMU's Centennial Year, one of our librarians will look at a notable book published during 1911, and give you a glimpse of what people were reading when our institution was in its infancy.

September: Under Western Eyes, by Joseph Conrad. Review by Glenn Johnson-Grau

October: Jennie Gerhardt, by Theodore Dreiser. Review by Kristine Brancolini

Coming up:
Ethan Frome, by Edith Wharton
The Devil's Dictionary, by Ambrose Pierce
The Outcry, by Henry James
Peter Pan, by J.M. Barrie

And more...

Are you interested in reading along with us, or even submitting your own 1911 review? Let us know!

Strangers No Longer: Ukrainian Catholics and Orthodox Remember the Holodomor

All are invited to join the Huffington Ecumenical Institute for an evening of liturgy and discussion centered on the famine in Ukraine of 1932-1933 (the Holodomor).

The library is hosting an exhibit of artwork illustrating the Holodomor and a documentary film screening for the first part of this event. Following this, guests will make their way to University Hall for an ecumenical memorial

She explained, " [I] took these pictures on the way to class the other day... accidental multiple exposures, but a good impression of the Library."

Rachel, we agree!
