American Muslims in the Age of President Trump

Amir Hussain

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.lmu.edu/theo_fac

Part of the Religion Commons

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Theological Studies at Digital Commons @ Loyola Marymount University and Loyola Law School. It has been accepted for inclusion in Theological Studies Faculty Works by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Loyola Marymount University and Loyola Law School. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@lmu.edu.
Trump and A Crisis in American Monotheisms

Spotlight on Theological Education

Miguel A. De La Torre, Guest Editor

Spotlight on Theological Education is a major initiative of the AAR Theological Education Committee and is an important venue for exploring opportunities and challenges in theological education. Each issue focuses on a particular theme, setting, or concern of theological education. Spotlight appears as a special supplement to Religious Studies News in the spring of each year.

Copyright © 2018 by the American Academy of Religion

Image: Lev Dolgachov / Alamy Stock Photo
CONTENTS

Contributors iii

Rejecting US Christianity in Hopes of Saving the Soul of the Nation 1
Miguel A. De La Torre

Why Trump, and What Next? An (Ex-)Evangelical Response 4
David P. Gushee

Protest and Resistance in the Trump Era 8
Kwok Pui-ian

American Muslims in the Age of President Trump 11
Amir Hussain

Are American Jews in Deep Trouble? 14
Santiago Slabodsky

Making America Inclusive Again: A “Catholic” Approach to Our Neighbors 18
Miguel H. Díaz

You Can’t Just Teach Your Way Out of Trumpism: A Systemic Analysis 22
Susan Brooks Thistlethwaite

Resources 25
CONTRIBUTORS

Miguel H. Díaz is the John Courtney Murray University Chair in Public Service at Loyola University Chicago and was selected by President Barack Obama as the ninth US ambassador to the Holy See. He is the former president of the Academy of Catholic Hispanic Theologians of the United States (ACHTUS), and in 2013, he was the recipient of the Virgilio Elizondo Award from ACHTUS, given in recognition for distinguished achievement in theology. He is currently working on three books: The Word Became Culture: Latino/a Theological Explorations, Building Bridges: God, Diplomacy and the Common Good and a book on God retrieving the mystical theology of John of the Cross. He has been a consultant to CNN, CNN en Español, Al Jazeera America, BBC News, Fox News, and MSNBC. He has conducted interviews that have appeared in a wide selection of national and international newspapers that include the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Chicago Tribune, the Miami Herald, and Infobae América.

Miguel A. De La Torre, a scholar-activist, has authored over one hundred articles and published thirty-three books (five of which won national awards). He presently serves as professor of social ethics and Latinx studies at the Iliff School of Theology in Denver. A Fulbright scholar, he has taught in Indonesia, Mexico, South Africa, and Germany. Within his guild, he served as the 2012 president of the Society of Christian Ethics. Additionally, he is the co-founder and first executive director of the Society of Race, Ethnicity, and Religion and the founding editor of the Journal of Race, Ethnicity, and Religion. Recently, he wrote the screenplay to a documentary on immigration (http://www.trailsofhopeandterrorthemovie.com/).

Amir Hussain is professor of theological studies at Loyola Marymount University, the Jesuit university in Los Angeles, where he teaches courses on Islam and comparative theology. His own particular specialty is the study of contemporary Muslim societies in North America. From 2011 to 2015, Hussain was the editor of the Journal of the American Academy of Religion. The most recent of his six books is Muslims and the Making of America, published in 2016 by Baylor University Press.

Kwok Pui-lan is Distinguished Visiting Professor of Theology at the Candler School of Theology at Emory University. Her research focuses on Asian feminist theology and postcolonial theology. She is the author or editor of twenty books, including Occupy Religion: Theology of the Multitude (Rowman and Littlefield, 2012, with Joerg Rieger) Postcolonial Imagination and Feminist Theology (Westminster John Knox, 2005); Introducing Asian Feminist Theology (Sheffield Academic, 2000); Discovering the Bible in the Non-Biblical World (Orbis Books, 1995); and Chinese Women and Christianity, 1860–1927 (Scholars Press, 1992). Kwok was the recipient of the AAR’s Award for Excellence in Teaching in 2009 and its president in 2011.

Santiago Slabodsky is the Florence and Robert Kaufman Endowed Chair in Jewish Studies in the Department of Religion and associate director of the Center for Race, Culture, and Social Justice at Hofstra University in New York. His main area of research is the relation between Jewish and Global South social theories. His book Decolonial Judaism: Triumphal Failures of Barbaric Thinking (Palgrave MacMillan, 2015) was awarded the 2017 Frantz Fanon Outstanding Book Award by the Caribbean Philosophical Association. At the American Academy of Religion, he cochairs the Liberation Theologies unit and is an elected member of the Program Committee. Internationally, he is the founding codirector of the trilingual journal Decolonial Horizons and has served as concurrent visiting professor at institutions in Europe, Latin America, and Africa.

Susan Brooks Thistlethwaite is professor of theology and president emerita (1998–2008) of Chicago Theological Seminary (CTS), where she has taught for over thirty years. She is the author and/or editor of thirteen academic books, and she worked on two translations of the Bible. She has also recently published two works of fiction. In addition to service on many not-for-profit boards including Interfaith Youth Core, and Faith in Public Life, which she helped found, she has also served the American Academy of Religion as the editor of the Academy Series for Scholars Press, the first chairperson of the Committee on the Status of Women in the Profession, cochair of Women and Religion Unit, and more recently cochair of the Religion and Politics Unit.
American Muslims in the Age of President Trump

Amir Hussain, Loyola Marymount University

Muslims, both within America and around the world, are the religious community that is most affected by the presidency of Donald J. Trump. I write this Spotlight reflection as both an American citizen—a Muslim from Los Angeles—and a scholar of Islam in North America. Wearing either or both hats, it is clear that the next three years of the Trump administration will continue to be difficult times to be an American Muslim. These difficulties were anticipated in the last century by John Carpenter in his 1996 film Escape from L.A. In the film, set in 2013, Los Angeles has become a penal colony for those who do not conform to the high moral standards of the American president. One of the residents is a young Iranian woman named Taslima, who tells the protagonist: “I was a Muslim. Then they made that illegal.” In the last century, I used to think that that line was very funny. Now I’m not so sure. In the 2006 film V for Vendetta, set in a future neo-Fascist Britain, one of the characters (Dietrich) is taken away by the authorities for owning a copy of the Qur’an. As a presidential candidate, Mr. Trump said famously on CNN on March 9, 2016, that “I think Islam hates us,” and his first year as president has not been a good one for American Muslims.1

From the time of Mr. Trump’s remark that “Islam hates us,” one has seen a shift from the rise of Islamophobia to what I term “misoislamia,” a neologism that captures the move from a fear (phobia) to a hatred (miso) for Islam and Muslims. The line that has been running over and over in my head comes from a local California band, Counting Crows: “All the anger and the eloquence are bleeding into fear.” America’s Muslims fear for our country—our home—and what will become of it. We saw the open intolerance to Islam in opposition to new mosques proposed throughout the country. We saw seven states (Alabama, Arizona, Kansas, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Dakota, and Tennessee) passing anti-sharia laws when not a single Muslim group had asked for the implementation of sharia laws. Oklahoma also voted for such a law, but it was struck down in 2012 and never implemented. We saw Lt. General Michael Flynn, who became President Trump’s National Security Advisor, tweet that “fear of Muslims is RATIONAL” and heard him claim that Islam is a political ideology (and not a religion, and therefore not protected under the US Constitution) which has become a “malignant cancer.”2 However, he resigned on February 13, 2017, not for his comments about Islam and Muslims, but for misleading Vice President Mike Pence about his telephone calls with the Russian ambassador.

We saw Islam-haters such as Steve Bannon and Sebastian Gorka come and go in the Trump administration; Stephen Miller remains. We saw President Trump retweet anti-Muslim videos from a right-wing fringe British group on November 29, 2017, to the dismay of British Prime Minister Theresa May. However, we also heard President Trump’s press secretary, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, defend the president by saying that it didn’t matter if the videos were real or not, as “the threat is real.”

---

On Friday, January 27, a week after his inauguration, President Donald Trump ordered that the United States ban travelers and refugees from seven Muslim-majority countries (Iraq, Syria, Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, and Yemen). He did this in the afternoon, after making comments that morning for International Holocaust Remembrance Day that made no mention either of the Jews or of anti-Semitism. Thousands of people protested the ban at airports across the country in the following days. I flew back to Los Angeles from Washington, DC, on January 29, and those protests were quite powerful to see: people standing up for us not just or only as refugees or immigrants, but as Muslims. That was extraordinary. What has also been amazing to see is the response from the American Jewish community. They have been at the forefront of the protests, both because they know that the commandment that is repeated more than any other commandment in the Torah is to not oppress the stranger, and because they know with the painful history of the Holocaust of where the road of prejudice and intolerance ends. And with the rise of hate crimes against Muslims, over half of the hate crimes committed against a religious group in America were against Jews.

The first travel ban was rejected by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit on February 9, 2017. President Trump introduced two subsequent versions of the ban, the most recent of which was ruled unconstitutional on February 15, 2018, by the US Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Richmond, Virginia.

Instead of celebrating American Muslims as an American success story of an educated and wealthy community, we are openly discriminated against by the Trump administration. And that hatred has been exported to other countries, with the perpetrator of the January 29, 2017, terrorist attack that killed six at the Islamic Cultural Centre of Quebec City expressing support for President Trump.

American Muslims, it should be pointed out, are very different from European or Canadian Muslim communities, other places where we are also minorities in a Western context. Canadian Muslims do not have the same history that American Muslims do. So while there was a small Muslim population in Canada at the end of the nineteenth century (the first Canadian census in 1871 listed a Muslim population of 13), it was nothing like the number of Muslim slaves that were present in America generations earlier. There is no comparable component in Canadian Muslim life that resembles African American Muslims, who represent at least one-quarter of American Muslims. African American Muslims, as Americans, have for centuries been part of the history of the United States.

In Europe, the situation is markedly different, both among the Muslim and non-Muslim populations, which each tend to be much more homogeneous than they are in the United States. So in Britain, the majority of Muslims have their origins in South Asia. In France, Muslims are mostly from North Africa. In Germany, Muslims are usually Turks or Kurds. Contrast that with the American situation, where Muslims are equally African American, South Asian, or Middle Eastern (to take only the three largest groups).

---

There are also narrower definitions of what it means to be French or English or German than what it means to be American, which incorporates all of those European identities and many others.

There is also a socioeconomic difference. American Muslims are an American success story, solidly middle class and mostly professional. There are thousands of American Muslim physicians, for example, perhaps as many as 20,000 if one looks at information from the Islamic Medical Association of North America. European Muslims by contrast are more marginalized, often in a much lower socioeconomic class with much higher rates of unemployment. Sometimes, as is often the case in Germany, they are in the status of migrants or guest workers, not citizens.

Finally, there is a difference between American-style secularism, which doesn’t seek to abolish religion but to give all religions an equal seat at the table, and various kinds of European disestablishment of religion, which seek to make the public space nonreligious. In the United States, America’s seven million Muslims are free to live out their Islam in the public space. And there are so many American Muslims who do this, none who did it better than my childhood hero, the Greatest of All Time. Look at the life of Muhammad Ali, and you begin to understand the contributions that American Muslims have made to what it means to be American.

American Muslims need to live the legacy of Muhammad Ali. We need to continue to stand, as he did, for justice. “Service to others is the rent you pay for your room here on earth,” Ali would often say, and we need to not only remember that saying, but to act on it. In this way, we can live out the best of our ideals, both as Americans and as Muslims.