April 2014

Ted Fields, Sr.

Morika Fields
Loyola Marymount University

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.lmu.edu/fgv

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.lmu.edu/fgv/vol1/iss1/13

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Academic Resource Center at Digital Commons @ Loyola Marymount University and Loyola Law School. It has been accepted for inclusion in First-Gen Voices: Creative and Critical Narratives on the First-Generation College Experience by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Loyola Marymount University and Loyola Law School. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@lmu.edu.
What can one say about a human life?
Seventy-five years on earth, three children,
Overcame pain and tears and years and strife,
Their joys celebrated, their fears hidden --
Isn’t that what the good eulogies do?
Yet pen and paper are hollow nods to
The root-deep memories of a man who Died of stubbornness, held my young hand through
The miles between the East and West Coasts, who Grew anything in his garden for you.
No, this father of my father was far
Too special for that, I find even these mere words too
Paltry to describe his immense value,
Unless you were to him what I was, his star