From the Dean's Address to Alumni at the State Bar Luncheon, Sept. 1979:

"Let our Loyola community be one in which we grow not merely intellectually but as persons, as human beings. Let us live together in mutual trust.

Let our community at Loyola Law School be rooted in a vision of what life might be like when men are honorable, where men's lives flow from an aspiration, the hope of not merely acting honorably but of being honorable. Being honorable is the basis for every true human community.

The vision is simple: on one hand it envisions the dignity and worth of every human life. On the other hand it demands that measure of humility which nurtures in us a willingness to serve the needs of the people.

This vision is like many of life's more vital lessons, one that cannot be taught, rather it must be caught. It can be caught only in a community where it lives. May such be our Loyola Law School community."

It has been five months since I was appointed Dean. The change from the business milieu to the academic has been both exciting and rewarding. Recently, I had the privilege of addressing our alumni at the State Bar Luncheon at the Biltmore in Los Angeles. In preparing that talk, I reviewed the recent enrollment statistics of the school, together with the accomplishment of our alumni. This research uncovered some interesting facts that reinforced the pride I have in being your Dean. Let me take a moment to review some of them with you.

This has been an outstanding year for admissions. First-year student registration totalled 318 day and 139 evening students. Perhaps more important was that these first year students came from applicant pools of 1,541 and 401 respectively. Overall, 38% of the members of our entering class were women. In short, the demand for a Loyola Law School education continues to remain high.

The selectivity that this demand allowed is underscored by the fact that the average LSAT scores of the applicant pool was 586 for day students and 578 for evening.

Other pertinent facts and statistics on our alumni and students that I discovered were:

1. Twenty (20) of our alumni are chief executive officers of major Southern California companies.
2. Eighty-five (85) of our alumni presently sit on the local, state or federal Bench.
3. Of the 25 major law firms in Los Angeles, 20 are interviewing third-year students at our school this year for possible placement.
4. Ninety-six percent (96%) of our 1978 graduates who passed the Bar are now employed.
5. Last year's "Law Review" editor is a clerk in the U.S. Circuit Court and has been appointed a clerk for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron White. Two students of this year's graduating class are being considered for Circuit Court clerkships.
6. This summer, Loyola Law School was awarded the Emil Gum pert Award for National excellence in Trial Advocacy by the American College of Trial Lawyers. The award included a $10,000 grant. Last year's winner was Cornell.
7. In August, a third-year student won first prize in the Nathan Burke Memorial Competition sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.
8. In July, two of our students won first place in the ABA-sponsored West Coast Regional Client Counseling Competition in San Francisco.

These accomplishments of both alumni and students, and many others of our faculty which I have not listed, are certainly attainments about which all of us can be justly proud.

We are now in an era when the legal profession is under attack. Competency and morality play an ever increasing, critical role in our legal community. We who are associated with Loyola Law School have no reason to doubt that our educational program sets the highest educational and moral standards. In fact, our rich religious heritage is one of the factors that make us unique as a law school.

As indicated in the special announcement mailed to you a short time ago, steps are being taken to preserve and maintain these high educational and ethical standards of legal training that are the heritage of the Law School. Architectural and fund-raising plans, which will insure that Loyola Law School will truly continue to be "a center for legal education" in the coming decades, are moving rapidly forward. These plans call for the construction of new buildings and the renovation and conversion of existing ones. The new campus will enhance teaching and learning of the law and foster increased interaction of students and faculty, thereby making a significant contribution to the entire learning process.

I am impressed with the overall concept of creating a campus with a feeling of identification and sense of "place" for our students, faculty and alumni.

Our new campus environment described fully in following pages is planned to foster and strengthen values for which Loyola Law School stands—intellectual competence, moral sensitivity and excellent professional development. Father Merrifield has described it as the "Loyola Experience." Our new campus will serve to nurture this "Experience." It is designed to promote the encounter of faculty, students and staff, one with another, in settings conducive to intellectual exchange, sharing and common trust.

I truly look forward to getting to know you better and to working with you on the exciting task of making the Law School all it is capable of becoming.

Sincerely,

The Greater Loyola Law School Development Program—A Challenge

Loyola Law School is unique among institutions for legal education in Southern California. This uniqueness is related to its roots in the religious philosophies of St. Ignatius of Loyola and in the founding principles of the School itself. These principles require more than just training men and women to "pass the bar" and become attorneys—they demand the training of men and women who will use that training to foster a more just society.

As Chairman of the Board of Visitors, it is my pleasure and privilege to dedicate The Greater Loyola Law School Development Program to this end.

This Program will bring the Law School into the eighties and beyond, with renewed strength and vigor. It calls for $6 million in capital gifts to underwrite new construction, renovation, and furnishing of an expanded physical plant. In addition, it will provide a $2 million beginning endowment fund, especially earmarked for the strengthening of student body, faculty and educational programs of the School.

Since you received an announcement of the Program's initiation, significant progress has been made. A viable structure for the fund-raising effort has been organized and set in motion and I would like to share with you some of the more important developments along those lines.

The Law School has appointed the firm of Frank O. Gehry and Associates as architects for the new campus. Preliminary designs and artist's conceptions of the new campus are presented in the following pages. We anticipate completion of the architectural phase of the Program by early spring.

I am privileged to have been asked to serve as Honorary Chairman of the alumni portion of the Capital Development Program, and to have Thomas E. Garcin '52 and John G. Thorpe '51 serving as the Co-Chairmen, spearheading this first major fund-raising effort on behalf of Loyola Law School.

They are in the process of forming an Alumni Steering Committee to provide the leadership required to insure the success of the Capital Development Program.

At the appropriate time, each alumnus will be invited to share in the aims and ideals of Loyola Law School and asked to participate in the Greater Loyola Law School Development Program. Commitments will be sought in the form of outright gifts, pledges extending over three to five years, bequests and various forms of deferred gifts including those that will provide income for life to you and/or your family.

The Committee's willing participation to serve as key volunteers is an expression of both the members' dedication to and appreciation for the education they received at Loyola Law School.

The success of any fund-raising program can be measured by the high level of early financial commitments. I am delighted to report to you that these early commitments from alumni, friends and corporations have reached the $2.7 million mark. This puts us in the enviable position of having over 33% of our goal in hand in the short time since beginning the Program.

By 1984 the Greater Loyola Law School Development Program, with your support, will have raised $8 million in gifts and pledges. This effort is part of the Loyola Marymount University Into the Eighties Development Program whose overall objective is to raise $24 million on a University-wide basis during the next five years.

The total program will bring many positive changes to the University and the Law School. Its completion will mean an assurance of the continuing high quality of its educational programs and a campus environment most conducive to the educational aims and ideals of the University.

Your personal commitment to the Greater Loyola Law School Development Program will help make these plans for construction and endowment a reality.

I am pleased and privileged to assume a leadership role in this exciting enterprise and am sure that all of you will want to join in the endeavor to provide the added means for Loyola Law School to achieve its inherent potential—to rise to a position of even greater pre-eminence and achieve the status that its heritage so strongly demands.

John E. Anderson '50
Chairman, Board of Visitors
The Greater Loyola Law School Development Program

In 1969, as the full force of an unprecedented national demand for legal education—"the law explosion," the increase in the number of court decisions, new statutes, regulations and the near revolutionary changes brought about by clinical legal education—broke over the legal profession, the impact upon the nation's law schools was substantial. Loyola Law School made the decision to expand enrollment rather than to ignore the thousands of outstanding applicants seeking a quality legal education.

Enrollment grew to more than 1,200 students, the faculty more than tripled, and the law library's collection doubled. While these developments established Loyola as one of the major law schools in the West, they also created serious space and teaching problems.

The Law School's physical facilities are strained beyond reasonable limits. The ability of the School to meet its academic goals and to provide the basic physical necessities intrinsic to a sound program of legal education has reached a critical stage.

During the past 10 years, more than 100,000 volumes plus 30,000 microfiche and audio cassettes have been added to the library's collection. This acquisition policy has produced one of the finest and most extensive law libraries west of the Mississippi, but the space allocated in 1964, when the Law School moved to its present location, for the library collection is too small today. Moreover, there is only a limited provision for modern audiovisual instructional aids and no provision for computer-assisted learning and research.

Faculty members, too, are experiencing the impact of overcrowded conditions. Many professors are housed in cramped, noisy offices that are remote from the library and from secretarial support. More importantly, these offices lack the appropriate privacy and quiet needed for student counseling, class preparation and research.

The New Loyola Law School Campus Plan

In order to meet curricular, student and faculty needs, a major building program coupled with a complete renovation of existing facilities is imperative.

The plan developed for the future Loyola Law School includes:

- A gradual reduction in the size of the student body, levelling off at approximately 1,000 students.
- Providing improved instructional space, including lecture rooms and self-study and discussion areas to accommodate 700 daytime and 300 evening students.
- The doubling of library space and establishment of a Learning Resource Center.
- Provision of on-campus space for Law Clinics and student and administrative services.
- Provision of suitable office space for faculty members.
- Initiation of an endowment fund to help ensure the continued excellence of educational programs, faculty and students.

The Teaching, Administration and Faculty Center

This new four-story structure will meet the major portion of faculty, student and administration needs.

The ground level of the main structure will house seminar rooms and student services including offices for the Student Bar Association, the Law Review and student organizations. This level will also house the student food services, and offices of the Campus Ministry program.

The second level will contain key administrative services, some of which are now housed off campus. These will include the Deans' offices, Admissions, Registrar, Business and Placement offices as well as Alumni Relations and Development.

The third level of the main building will be dedicated to the faculty and will provide 22 private faculty offices, space and carrels for adjunct faculty, and work space for appropriate secretarial support. In addition, this level will house a faculty library, a faculty conference room, two seminar rooms and a law classroom. The fourth level will have 18 additional faculty offices.

The estimated cost of constructing the Teaching, Administration and Faculty Center is $4 million.
Law Library and Learning Resource Center

A law school library is more than a repository for books. It is a living, vital force in the training of attorneys and a center for study and research. Students, faculty and practicing attorneys must have full and easy access to the myriad of books, journals and documents essential to the training and practice of law.

The new Library and Learning Resource Center will accommodate a systematic expansion of storage and retrieval services for an increasing number of educational and research materials essential to stay current in the law. As new laws, statutes, regulations and case findings at the federal and local levels are published, growth from a current 221,000-volume collection to an eventual 500,000 volumes and microforms will be possible.

The Learning Resource Center of the library will house specialized teaching and learning equipment and give students access to a whole spectrum of printed and audiovisual data increasingly important in legal education. This learning supplement will offer the student opportunities for course review and self-testing as the academic year progresses.

Loyola Law School has always prided itself on stressing fundamentals as the basis for teaching law. The new Library and Learning Resource Center will better enable the Law School to continue this outstanding tradition.

The estimated cost of reconstructing the existing Law School building into the new Law Library and Learning Resource Center is $1 million.

The New Loyola Law School Campus Mall (Artist’s Rendering)
Instructional Halls

To assure that the new campus of the Law School has a feeling of identification for the students, faculty and visitors, and also provides a "sense of place" for the Loyola educational program, two of the major classrooms have been designed as separate buildings. These instructional halls will provide space specially designed to effect optimum facility utilization for the teaching of law. In addition, the halls will offer professors maximum flexibility to use the latest technological advances in teaching methodology, including provision of closed circuit television, slides, films and other audiovisual techniques.

The estimated cost of constructing the instructional halls is $475,000.

Moot Court Building

The teaching and learning of the law itself is only part of the training for a lawyer—practical experience in the courtroom is essential. One of the important portions of the new campus plan is the construction of a Moot Court Building. This structure will provide expanded, modern facilities for this most important function of legal education at Loyola and enhance training in the practical side of the law.

The estimated cost of constructing the Moot Court Building is $275,000.

The Law Clinics Building

The Loyola Law School clinical programs are an essential part of a thorough legal education. They provide the practical balance to theoretical study and principles. Through these clinical programs, students are given opportunities to apply their overall understanding of legal concepts in a variety of urban and community settings.

At present, the clinics and their faculty are housed more than a mile from the campus in rented space and are remote from the library and support services. In order to remedy this less-than-adequate learning situation, the clinics will be relocated on the campus and provided with permanent quarters.

This relocation will be accomplished by remodeling and refurbishing the present one-story building located at 1420 W. Ninth Street adjacent to the present Law School building.

The new Loyola Law Clinics building will contain attorneys' offices, interview rooms, conference rooms and the advocacy trial rooms. In addition, this building will also contain one large instructional hall.

The estimated cost of establishing the Loyola Law Clinics building is $125,000.

Chapel

In keeping with its educational philosophy, "the disciplining of both mind and spirit," the Law School will—as an important and integral part of the new campus—have a new chapel. The chapel will provide a place for worship and quiet contemplation for students and faculty alike.

The new chapel will occupy a prominent place on the new campus, and give emphasis to the stress placed upon ethical and moral aspects of the law by the Law School.

The location placement of the chapel, instructional halls and moot court as separate entities is planned in such a way as to create a true law school campus in the midst of central Los Angeles.

The estimated cost of constructing the new campus chapel is $125,000.
Endowment

In order to provide the best possible legal education, Loyola Law School must have sufficient flexibility and freedom to meet creatively and responsibly its educational goals and to maintain its professional integrity. The Law School needs to become financially stronger and not overly dependent on revenues from any one source. This goal can be accomplished by establishing its own endowment fund.

Endowment funds form the key element in the preservation of private institutions of legal education such as Loyola. They provide a stable, long-term source of operating income to underwrite faculty salaries and educational programs and make possible the provision of financial aid to qualified students through scholarship and loan assistance. In short, they provide the margin for excellence.

The need for endowment funds will become even more significant in the future as spiraling inflation impacts the cost of private legal education. Increased endowment will provide the means for meeting these rising costs and keep Loyola Law School within reach of all those who might benefit from it. These endowment earnings will be used to make the critical difference in the quality of the Law School student body, faculty and academic programs.

The Greater Loyola Law School Development Program calls for a beginning endowment of $2 million.

Next Steps

While gifts from corporations, foundations, friends, parents and faculty will be sought, the School must look first to its alumni for initial support.

Committees of alumni have been meeting to determine overall alumni giving potential. Their efforts to date indicate that the $8 million goal is both realistic and achievable.

To ensure the success of this capital fund-raising effort, gifts and pledges in the ranges, numbers and approximate sequence indicated on the accompanying gift range table must be committed.

The Program will begin with the Advance and Major Gifts segments designed to secure commitments ranging from $25,000 to $1 million. This early high level of support will provide inspiration and momentum for the Program’s successful completion.
Benefactor Fritz Burns Makes Gifts Totaling $2 Million to Loyola Law School

Gifts of property valued at $2.1 million have been made to the Greater Loyola Law School Development Program through the generosity of the late Fritz B. Burns, longtime benefactor of Loyola Law School and Loyola Marymount University.

A former Honorary Chairman of the Law School Board of Visitors and recipient of the Alumni Association’s Distinguished Achievement Award in 1978, Burns was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree in 1963 by Loyola for his dedicated service. He was named a Regent Emeritus of the University in 1973. His numerous charitable works were recognized by the Catholic Church through his induction as a member of the Sovereign Military Order of the Knights of Malta.

In 1964, it was Burns who provided the Ninth Street site for the Law School, as well as substantial funding for its construction. His generosity also extended to the University’s Westchester campus, where he helped make possible the construction of a new science building. These most recent gifts will be used to help underwrite the $4 million cost of the new Teaching, Administration and Faculty Center.

One of Southern California’s foremost real estate and construction figures for almost 50 years, Burns pioneered the development of mass production housing in the post World War II era. He was responsible for creating major residential communities in Westchester, Panorama City, Toluca Lake, Pasadena and West Los Angeles, as well as the development of Hawaii’s Waikiki Beach as an internationally renowned resort area.

Burns’ son, F. Patrick Burns, a 1948 graduate of the University, currently serves as a member of the LMU Board of Trustees.

Development Program Update

Advance Donations to Development Program Near $3 Million Mark

Advance gifts and pledges totalling just over $2.7 million have been made to the Greater Loyola Law School Development Program, getting it off to a strong start. The amount constitutes more than 33% of the Program’s five-year $8 million goal.

In addition to the $2.1 million contributed through the late Fritz B. Burns, the Program has received initial corporate and foundation commitments amounting to $240,000 from Lloyd’s Bank, Knudsen Foundation, TICOR Foundation, Times Mirror Foundation and Western State University College of Law Foundation. Advance gifts and pledges from members of the Board of Visitors and Alumni Steering Committee members, resulting from limited beginning efforts to secure contributions, have already reached $400,000.

Future issues of the Loyola Lawyer will feature updates on this first-ever capital fund-raising effort for the Law School.

Anderson, Garcin and Thorpe to Lead Alumni Fund-Raising Effort

John E. Anderson ’50 has been named Honorary Chairman and Thomas E. Garcin ’52 and John G. Thorpe ’51, Co-Chairman, respectively, of the Law School Alumni Steering Committee. They and their Committee will be responsible for the planning, organization and solicitation of the alumni advance, major, and key gifts and pledges required to complete the Greater Loyola Law School Development Program.

Anderson, Chairman of the Law School Board of Visitors, and James H. Kindel, Jr. ’40 are the founding partners of the Los Angeles and Santa Ana law firm of Kindel and Anderson. Anderson has served as a member of the Law School Alumni Association Board of Governors and as an adjunct professor of taxation and tax planning at the Law School. He is also a member of several corporate and civic boards, including Claremont Men’s College, St. John’s Hospital and the Metropolitan Los Angeles YWCA. He and his wife, Marion, have four children and reside in Bel Air.

Garcin recently joined the Century City law firm of Shutan & Trost after many years as a solo practitioner. While a student, he received the Scott Moot Court Competition Award. Garcin has served the Law School in several capacities since his graduation, including those of President of the Alumni Association’s Board of Governors (1975-1977) and a member of the Class of 1952’s 25-Year Reunion Committee. He and his wife, Carne, live in Encino. They have two children, a daughter, Mrs. Valea Frear and a son, Robert, who is a 1979 graduate of the Law School.

Thorpe is a senior partner with the Los Angeles law firm of Thorpe, Sullivan, Workman, Thorpe & O’Sullivan, which he founded with Law School alumnus Roger Sullivan ’52 in 1957. Prior to entering private practice, he was a Deputy District Attorney for Los Angeles County (1953-56) and counsel for the Southern Pacific Company (1954-57); Thorpe’s civic activities include service as a Director of the Metabolic Foundation of Los Angeles and Past President of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick. He and his wife, Marie, reside in North Hollywood. They have four children, the oldest of whom, Gregory, is a first-year law student at Loyola.

Initially joining Anderson, Garcin and Thorpe as Chairmen for their respective classes or class groupings are: Martin J. Burke ’26; Robert J. Magdlen ’32; Carl M. Gould ’42; Hugh L. Macneil ’48; Jack M. Ostrow ’48; Ernest M. Clark, Jr. ’49; Robert S. Dickerman ’49; Gilbert Dreyfuss ’53; Joseph M. McLaughlin ’55; Robert C. Haase, Jr. ’56; Thomas E. Workman ’57 and John B. Dear Loyola Law School Alum:

The Greater Loyola Law School Development Program described in this issue of the Loyola Lawyer represents an important new direction for the Law School. However, in addition to the School’s capital needs, it is important that we keep in mind its operating needs as well.

A key recommendation of the Law School Long Range Planning Committee is that efforts must be made to reduce the Law School’s heavy dependence on tuition as virtually its only source of operating income. This can only be accomplished by increased annual support from alumni, the chief beneficiaries of Loyola Law School’s educational program, and this must occur along with our efforts to raise capital funds.

Last year, contributions through The Advocates, the School’s annual support group, reached $75,155 from 461 alumni and other friends. This represented an increase of 33% in dollars and a remarkable 76% in donors over the previous year. However, when we consider that only 10% of the total reachable alumni made a gift to their Law School during 1978-79, there is the need for an increased effort on everyone’s part.

I hope that when the opportunity avails itself this year, you step forward and make a gift to The Advocates. You will be joining with other alumni in making an investment that will provide each of us dividends in the years to come.

Sincerely,

Charles R. Redmond ’75
Chairman, The Advocates

Advocates Goal Set at $100,000

After raising in excess of $75,000 during 1978-79, The Advocates' goal for the current fiscal year was established at $100,000, according to Charles R. Redmond '75, Chairman for 1979-80. Redmond, who chaired last year's successful effort, is Vice President for Administration and Services and Assistant to the President of Times Mirror Company (Los Angeles).

Each year, alumni and other friends of Loyola provide funds which help the Law School meet its annual operating costs. Monies received from The Advocates are applied toward the purchase of books for the library, scholarships for deserving and qualified students, faculty salaries, plant maintenance and other expense items. All monies received through The Advocates are used exclusively for Loyola Law School.

The Advocates program this year has taken on a new approach. Over 100 alumni volunteers are being recruited to personally ask for tax deductible gifts to Loyola Law School. By securing this large number of volunteers, no one person has a large assignment. The personal solicitation program is organized at each of the following contribution levels: the J. Rex Dibble Fellows ($500-$999), the Walter Henry Cook Fellows ($250-$499), and the Advocate Fellows ($100-$249).

Donors at all three levels receive in recognition of their gift a personalized paperweight, law library privileges, a copy of the Alumni Directory and listing in the Annual Report and Donor Honor Roll. Members of the Rev. Joseph J. Donovan Fellows ($1,000 or more) also receive an invitation to the annual dinner held each fall to recognize major benefactors of both the University and the Law School.
"Legal education is a strange hybrid. It should be far more humanistic than it is. We put out technicians, which we must, but we should strive to produce more educated people," states Rev. Richard A. Vachon, S.J., professor of law at Loyola Law School and recently appointed Associate Dean for academic affairs. "By and large, however, our faculty is aware of the problem and is attempting to do something about it."

Fr. Vachon's appointment as Associate Dean on July 1 was concurrent with the naming of the Law School's new Dean, Theodore A. Bruinsma. "Fr. Vachon's long association with Loyola and the positive support for him indicated by the faculty, students and alumni was instrumental in making my decision," the Dean says.

A member of the Law School faculty since 1962, Fr. Vachon has taught courses in Constitutional Law, Legal Method, Conflict of Laws, Trusts, Contracts, Criminal Law, and is currently conducting a class in Torts. He was Interim Dean of the Law School from 1968-69.

"I've watched Loyola grow from a relatively modest institution of around 300 students into a school of national significance, with more than 1,200 students," Dean Vachon observes. "I think Loyola is rather unique in that it keeps in touch with the practicalities of lawyering. We teach our students how to be lawyers and at the same time continue to be an institution that encourages scholarship."

A Jesuit priest, Fr. Vachon regards his role at the Law School as an extension of this basic philosophy. "I'm here to encourage intellectual growth as well as to be of service to the faculty and especially the students. I've made it my personal policy to maintain an 'open door' to everyone who might need to talk with me."

A practicing attorney as well as educator, Dean Vachon is of counsel with the Los Angeles law firm of Tucker & Coddington, which specializes in airplane defense. He is a graduate of Gonzaga University where he earned bachelor's and master's degrees in philosophy. He received an LL.B. from the University of San Francisco and furthered his legal education with an LL.M. degree and a doctorate in the science of law (S.J.D.) degree, both from Columbia University. During completion of his doctoral dissertation at Columbia, he was the recipient of a Rockefeller Foundation Grant to research philosophy in the middle ages.

Fr. Vachon joined the Society of Jesus (Jesuits) in 1937 because "the life was exciting to me. I was fascinated by the Jesuits I met and still am. Since grammar school, it was the only really serious thing I had considered doing," he recalls.

In 1950 he was ordained a Roman Catholic priest, and not long after, realized he wanted to go into law. "It occurred to me that the most effective way of influencing the body politic is to join those who control it. I studied law so that I could speak their language."

He worked off and on in law offices after passing the California Bar in 1956. While teaching criminal law in 1971, he worked as an assistant district attorney at the invitation of the late D.A. Joseph Busch, a 1951 Loyola Law School graduate. It was an experience which remains a highlight of Vachon's career.

Born in central Alaska, his father was a fur trader. While he was still young, the family moved to Quebec and then to Boston. At age 9, Santa Monica became his home.

"What fascinates me most about law is the theoretical and philosophical aspects. Another thing that fascinates me is the concept that the law is capable of doing so much good for so many if not abused. Yet, the process has been abused," he contends.

This ideology is the message Dean Vachon sends to all of his students.

"I'm the type of person who believes that most of life is in the prudential order—most things don't fall into the category of sin or virtue," he says.

"Consequently, you've got to make decisions for yourself, and be aware of the gamble that life is and offers."

Rev. Richard A. Vachon, S.J., opens his door to all students and faculty who might wish to talk with him.
