from the Dean

Loyola Law School's 56th commencement is now history. The 361 graduates of the Class of 1977 have earned their Juris Doctor degrees; most are awaiting the results of the July California Bar examination; all are faced with new career challenges and obligations. These lawyers are now ready to be tested in the world outside the classroom. We are proud of their accomplishments while they were students and we anticipate their future achievements. They are a vital part of Loyola Law School's respected and growing alumni group.

Our Alumni Office recently informed me that there are now more than 4,000 Loyola Law School graduates. And, frankly, I was surprised to learn that half our alumni graduated since 1971. I believe it is important that all our alumni and friends be kept well informed about the progress of Loyola Law School.

The Law School has inaugurated a new version of the alumni publication, Loyola Lawyer. In its new format, this magazine will be published quarterly and will report on programs, people and other items of general interest. Loyola Lawyer is intended to be the chronicle of Loyola Law School, its ongoing record. In this and future issues, you will be able to follow the news about your classmates, former teachers, and others associated with the Law School. You are urged to contribute news and your viewpoint on issues of general interest by writing to the Editor of the Loyola Lawyer.

It was a personal honor to have helped in choosing this issue's feature article on a respected individual and a fine teacher, J. Rex Dibble. With 40 years of service to the Law School and its students, Professor Dibble has touched the professional lives of a majority of our alumni.

The Honor Roll of Law School donors also appears in this magazine. It is my pleasure to thank alumni and friends who have provided financial support this past fiscal year.

I hope you will maintain a continuing interest in Loyola Law School and I welcome your involvement with the Law School and this publication. I trust you will welcome the information which will be provided. After all, you are the Loyola Lawyer.
A multi-faceted personality;

A teacher of the first order, the Law School of this University has been the rich beneficiary of his skill for a generation of students and for six of these years, he performed notably as Dean of the School.

—Law School Commencement
May 1, 1968

A teacher of the first order. There is no more accurate way to describe him nor a more concise way to praise him. It has been almost ten years since J. Rex Dibble was the first Loyola Law School faculty member to receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from the same institution where he was teaching. The wording in the citation which accompanied the honorary degree holds true today as it did in 1968—only that more than one generation of students have been the beneficiaries of his skills.

Rex Dibble is among the few who have been successful in two professions. A lawyer by training and by practice, he shares his legal knowledge in the classroom and has been educating other lawyers for some 40 years. Last spring, the professor familiar to thousands of Law School alumni was honored at the Annual Alumni Dinner for his years of service to Loyola Law School.

By origin a Utahn, he early absorbed the educational opportunities offered in his native State and entered the Law School of Stanford University where he was graduated with honors in 1936. His talents, training, analytical know-how, and unfailing industry assured him a notable career in his chosen profession.

No doubt, the Rev. Joseph J. Donovan, S.J., Regent of the School, who hired Dibble to teach part time, realized the potential of the young lawyer. Dibble was born in Kaysville, Utah, and earned his B.S. degree from Utah State Agricultural College. The choice to accept a law scholarship from Stanford over a business scholarship from Northwestern University brought him and his family to California, the State the Dibbles have called home ever since.

So, in 1932 Dibble left his native Utah (where his great grandfather Philo Dibble, Sr. settled with famed Mormon Brigham Young), and began his law studies.

The number one graduate in his Class of 1936, Dibble spent four years at Stanford Law School on a research assistantship. It was during those years that his research and writing involved the five volume work, American Family Laws. Professor C. G. Vernier named Dibble and Richard A. Frank as co-authors of Volume V. Dibble’s hard work was beginning to pay off for the young attorney, his wife, Elda and their two daughters, Barbara and Toni. The research salary took Dibble from impoverished student status (“In September 1932, I had $50.00,” says Dibble) to being the owner of a “new car and money in the bank.” With his new LL.B. degree in hand, Dibble moved to Los Angeles where he could look forward to a salary range of $25 to $100 a month. Actually, because of having a family, he started at $125.

In addition to receiving his legal start from Stanford, Dibble received impetus for his other career: teaching. "I would like to think that I am a little like a teacher I had," explains Dibble. "Some of the students thought he was the greatest teacher, others thought he was an S.O.B." And it is on his experiences with his mentor, George Osborne, that he bases some aspects of his own philosophy on education.

"There are some teachers who are nice and are loved, some in the middle of the road who are neither hated nor loved and some who are hated and admired sometimes by the same students," says Dibble. "I don't think that I am as tough a teacher as he was, but I run a tight ship."

"In my class there is no drinking, even coffee, no eating and a minimum of whispering," he says. Lest the uninitiated think harshly of Dibble, the lawyer educator is as quick to show his humor as he is to offer his advice for students. "If the law school exposes you only to 'nice' teachers, then you won't be prepared for the S.O.B.'s on the outside," he advises.

Professor Dibble's love for teaching developed along with his legal career. From 1942 through 1948, he was a partner in the firm of Miller, Chevalier, Peeler & Wilson. His wartime years were spent as a First Lieutenant, Anti-Aircraft, with the U.S. Army and as assistant counsel for the War Department Price Adjustment Board. Later, in 1951-52, he was counsel for the Los Angeles Extension of the Air Force Division of the Armed Services Renegotiation Board and a member of the Los Angeles Regional Renegotiation Board. After World War II, Dibble continued his part-time position with Loyola while associated with the firm of Hill, Farrer & Burrill.

Especially articulate in the interpretation of the law, he has enriched its literature with noteworthy contributions in the sensitive areas of Constitutional Law and Taxation.

A specialist in Federal Taxation and Constitutional Law, Dibble still teaches Constitutional Law at Loyola. A look through the Law School scrapbook of clippings from years gone by shows that Dibble was quoted for his opinions on a number of occasions. The headline of the daily People's World on December 14, 1953 says, "Law Professor Takes Top Court to Task" with the article quoting Dibble at a Lawyers Club luncheon: "The Supreme Court has moved more than a spit and a holler to the right," he was quoted as saying. A law review article by Dibble has also been foot-noted in the Supreme Court decision, Ginsberg v. N.Y., not a mean accomplishment for any lawyer.

"While I was a practicing attorney, I did a lot of work in taxation, which was interesting, but not philosophically rewarding. In teaching, I hope that I leave something more than winning a lawsuit." With characteristic straightforwardness, Dibble adds, "It's nice to know that some of your ideas may still be kicking around in some former students' minds."

Dibble's former students do remember him.

Tom Workman '57 of Lawler, Felix & Hall substantiates that Rex Dibble is an outstanding teacher.

"Rex ran a tight ship and scared everyone to death in class," says Workman. This Los Angeles attorney and active Alumni Association member elaborates that Dibble is the same individual who invited the graduates in his class to a party in his home and who took those interested in sailing on his boat. "Rex reminds me that I was drinking a martini in his home," says Workman, "when my Mother called his house to say that I had passed the Bar exam."

Roger Sullivan '52 of Thorpe, Sullivan, Workman, Thorpe & O'Sullivan, also says that students were all in complete terror of Dibble during school but that after graduation they would be hard pressed to find a warmer individual. Sullivan can itemize several Law School friends who have crewed on the Dibble's sailboat.

Law School Professor Walter Trinkaus agrees. "Whenever I'm at an alumni event, many lawyers ask about Rex. I've known people who have volunteered the opinion that Rex is the finest professor they've had in a university anywhere."

There may be little correlation between being good law students and good sailors but there have been many Loyola graduates who have been invited on the Dibles' 46½ foot sailboat, "Comanche," a P.C.C. sloop now berthed at Dana Point Harbor. "Many years ago, some of my students were ready to crew for the Transpac Race [to Hawaii] when our trip had to be cancelled," he recalls. He has sailed "Comanche"

In many ocean races in the Los Angeles, Long Beach, Catalina and Newport areas. "For a while, there, we rarely missed a weekend trip to Catalina Island."

As Dibble has watched many of Loyola's students become good lawyers (and, perhaps, good sailors), he has also seen the physical side of the Law School grow. In 1960, he was appointed Acting Dean of the Law School, succeeding Sayre MacNeil who had headed the Law School for almost 20 years. The school building was then located on Grand Avenue in downtown Los Angeles. In a memorandum to the Law Alumni, the "Semi-Annual Report," Dibble penned, "The University's plans for a new Law School building are still being pushed. At present, it appears that a downtown site other than the present location is a real possibility. This would make it easier to operate while the building is under construction, and also provide more ground area in a better location."

As the reputation of Loyola Law School developed, so did the need for more room. "The good reputation kept getting us more applicants. The [old] School could hold a total of 350 students; we had no office space for new faculty, and no 'head' facilities," Dibble explains. Architects, representatives from the Westchester campus of the then Loyola University and individuals from the Law School (particularly then Associate Dean Lloyd Tevis) met with Dibble, who by then had been named Sixth Dean of the Law School in 1962.

The new building opened its doors in the Fall of 1964. With the Law School firmly settled in its new West Ninth Street home, Dibble resigned as Dean in 1965. In the October 19, 1967 Daily Journal his remarks at a Lawyers Club Luncheon were reported. In defense of the "case" method of teaching, he said, "Our first job is to produce good lawyers, not legal philosophers."

The Professor Dibble relaxing in his office looks more like the good sailor that he is than like the formidable professor he is reputed to be. A warm individual with a salty sense of humor, he does not hesitate to share his ideas.

On Constitutional Law
"Constitutional Law is one of the most difficult subjects to teach because not only do Supreme Court decisions change the rules, they also change entire theories. It is essentially a study of one court, a concentrated area in which authority isn't diffused."

On Law Today
"Some basic developments I've seen in the last few years are an increased concern for and by the consumer and the public, and greater protection for the poor. Also, today, the public's awareness of legal matters has increased substantially. They are more aware of the effect of Supreme Court decisions. Decisions are covered in the press today on the front page. In the past they were buried on inside pages, if reported at all."

"While the public seems to have a general feeling that there are too many lawyers in politics, I believe that lawyers are crucial if the complex laws of the land are to be enacted, understood and dealt with properly."

On Law Students
"The Law students enrolled immediately following World War II were probably the most serious I have ever taught, but today's students are also perceptive and are more interested in the consumer areas, in criminal law and in as Dean. In the October 19, 1967 Daily Journal his remarks at a Lawyers Club Luncheon were reported. In defense of the "case" method of teaching, he said, "Our first job is to produce good lawyers, not legal philosophers."

"There is a greater percentage of women in classes now. Overall, the level of interest and activity of women seems greater. The women students seem to be more interested than the men students. I'm a firm believer in women lawyers. Any law firm worthy of being called a good firm will have women attorneys. Women can do the job, and in some cases, a better job."

Professor Dibble seems almost reluctant to talk about his own honors and achievements. He says that his own law classmates are now judges, attorneys in private and corporate practice. Some are also professors like himself. But in talking about what he and his associates have done through the years, he will reveal that he is pleased to be among the limited number of attorneys invited to membership in the American Law Institute. Invited in 1948, he has recently been given life membership in the organization.

The Rex Dibble who was first in his class, who has been cited [in a footnote] by the Supreme Court, who has authored law review articles, who has been a successful attorney and who has probably motivated and educated more Loyola Law School students than has any other professor says:

"I've had some students I knew were going to be good lawyers and others I wasn't so sure about. Some have surprised me both ways."

Loyola University is this day privileged to cite the scroll of high achievement of this scholar of distinction and is particularly pleased, because of his superior accomplishments in the field of legal education to present for the degree of DOCTOR OF LAWS to Rex Dibble.

That's not bad for the Stanford law graduate who began with $50 and a small scholarship. Incidentally, "informed sources" reveal that Dibble's only "low" law grade was a B+ in Legal Ethics.

Of grades, Dibble has a last word of advice to students:

"Grades themselves are not the ultimate. But they are a final and semi-public record which frequently follows the student through his professional life. They may be a turning point in a career. They certainly helped me when Father Donovan chose a part-time teacher in 1937."
The Reverend Joseph J. Donovan, S.J., regent of Loyola Law School for 44 years, died on September 16, 1977 in Los Gatos, California. Father Donovan was 86 years old and had been in failing health for some time. A founding member of Loyola Law School, Father Donovan was a leader in the development of legal education services in the Los Angeles community. More than three generations of judges and lawyers are beneficiaries of his dedication to Loyola and excellence in legal education.

Father Donovan was born in San Francisco on February 25, 1891. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1912 and was ordained to the priesthood in July, 1925. Father Donovan earned bachelor's, master's, and the Ph.D. degrees while studying at St. Ignatius College (now the University of San Francisco), Gonzaga University, Columbia University, and the Gregorian University of Rome. He received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from Loyola in 1970.

Father Donovan served for many years on the faculty of Loyola College [now Loyola Marymount University] and was named in 1927 to concurrent posts as dean of arts and sciences at Loyola College and as regent of the Law School. He held the deanship for a three-year period and was regent until 1971, when he became Regent Emeritus. For his outstanding contributions to society, the legal profession, and Loyola Law School, Father Donovan was awarded the St. Thomas More Law Society Medallion of Merit in 1972.

On September 22, a Mass was celebrated in Father Donovan's memory in Sacred Heart Chapel on the Loyola Marymount University campus. Principal celebrant was the Reverend Richard A. Vachon, S.J., a member of the Law School faculty. The eulogy was given by the Reverend Charles S. Casassa, S.J., University Chancellor. Bishop John J. Ward of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles presided in the sanctuary. Scores of Father Donovan's former students and friends attended the concelebrated Memorial Mass. The Funeral Mass and interment were in Santa Clara, California.
Bob Vaughan Heads New Board of Visitors

J. R. (Bob) Vaughan '39, chairman and president of Knudsen Corporation (Los Angeles), has been named by University President Donald P. Merrifield, S.J., as chairman of the Law School's newly-organized Board of Visitors. The group, now in the process of formation, will play a leadership role in the advancement of the Law School and its programs. Theodore (Ted) A. Von der Ahe '31 and Fritz B. Burns will serve as honorary co-chairmen. Von der Ahe is chairman of Von's Grocery Company (El Monte), which he co-founded, and is a director of Bank of America. Burns, a prominent Southern California land developer and Regent Emeritus of Loyola Marymount University, was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree by Loyola in 1963 for his dedicated and long-standing service on behalf of the Law School.

According to Vaughan, the Visitors thrust will be two-fold: to provide and build support for the Law School, as well as periodically review and appraise its programs. They will work closely with Dean Fred Lower, faculty, students, and alumni in carrying out their responsibilities.

Vaughan, a regent of Loyola Marymount University since 1973, was engaged in the private practice of law until joining the Knudsen Corporation in 1965. His long record of community service includes membership on the National Safety Council Board of Directors and the chairmanship of the Federal Reserve Bank (San Francisco-Los Angeles Branch). A distinguished group of individuals joins Vaughan as the initial and founding members of the Loyola Law School Board of Visitors. They include:

Theodore A. Bruinsma, father of Tim '73, is president of Harvest Industries (Los Angeles). He is a graduate of Washington and Lee University, Harvard Business School, and Harvard Law School. Prior to joining Harvest Industries, Bruinsma was president of Lear-Jet Industries and executive vice president of Packard Bell Electronics Corporation. He has also practiced law as a senior attorney with the New York law firm of Whitman, Ransom & Coulson.

Active in various civic and political organizations, Bruinsma served on the Los Angeles Citizens Committee for Rapid Transit.

The Honorable Wm. Matthew Byrne, Jr. is judge of the United States District Court for the Central District of California. He earned his bachelor's and law degrees at the University of Southern California, and was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree by Loyola in 1971.

Judge Byrne was a partner in a Los Angeles law firm until his appointment by President Lyndon Johnson in 1967 as United States Attorney for the Central District of California. In 1970, he resigned as U.S. Attorney and was subsequently appointed executive director of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest. Byrne was appointed a judge of the U.S. District Court in 1971.

Judge Byrne is past president of the Los Angeles chapter of the Federal Bar Association. He is currently vice-chairman of the Human Rights section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association. Judge Byrne serves on the Board of Trustees of Pomona College and is also a member of the Loyola Marymount University's Board of Regents.

Stafford R. Grady, chairman and chief executive officer of Lloyds Bank California (Los Angeles), received both his bachelor's and law degrees from George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

Prior to joining Lloyds Bank in 1974, Grady served as Insurance Commissioner for the State of...
California, Special Attorney in the Chief Counsel's office for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and Assistant United States Attorney. He was also a partner in a Los Angeles law firm for eleven years.

A member of various business, civic, educational, and professional organizations, Grady's board memberships include the California Bankers Association, Purex Corporation, and INA Corporation. Grady is a member of Occidental College's Board of Trustees and a former member of the Board of Trustees of Loyola Marymount University.

John T. Gurash '39 is chairman of the executive committee and director of INA Corporation (Philadelphia). Joining INA in 1968 as executive vice president, Gurash became chairman in 1969, and assumed his present position with the company in 1975.

Gurash's current business activities include serving as a director of Purex Corporation, Household Finance Corporation, and Lloyds Bank California. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of Villanova University (Philadelphia) and of Occidental College.

Richard J. Riordan is a partner in the Los Angeles law firm of Riordan, Caps & Carbone. He received his bachelor's degree from Princeton University and his law degree from the University of Michigan Law School.

Riordan serves on several corporate and civic boards, including the Board of Trustees of The John Tracy Clinic and the Board of Directors for the Greater Los Angeles United Way. He is a trustee of Pitzer College.

Maynard J. Toll, father of Janet Davidson '78, is senior partner in the Los Angeles law firm of O'Melveny & Myers. He received his bachelor's degree from the University of California, Berkeley and his law degree from Harvard Law School.

Toll is a director of the Counsel on Legal Education for Professional Responsibility and also the American Bar Foundation. He served as president of the Los Angeles County Bar Association in 1963. Toll's other activities include serving as a director of various business concerns including The Copley Press, Cypress Mines Corporation, Earle M. Jorgensen Company, and Western Federal Savings and Loan Association. He is also a director of The Hospital of the Good Samaritan, serving on its executive committee, and of the Automobile Club of Southern California where he was chairman of the board from 1973 to 1975.

Toll received Loyola Law School's St. Thomas More Law Society Medallion of Merit in 1969, and was also the recipient of the Shattuck-Price Award from the Los Angeles County Bar Association in 1974.
Property Rights vs. Government Power: A Timely Controversy

By Professor Gideon Kanner

The extent to which governmental regulations may impinge on private property rights constitutes one of the most pervasive and hotly contested constitutional issues of the day. The controversy arises out of the conflict between constitutionally protected property rights and the state police power. These protected property rights are traditionally understood to be subject to reasonable governmental regulations designed to promote public safety, health, welfare, and morals. The problem is that as perceptions of worthwhile societal values change, the notions of what may constitute proper police power objectives also change. The emergence, for example, of such influential attitudes as the environmentalist ethic and no-growth movements, has inspired governmental entities to enact new regulations limiting heretofore unrestrained property rights.

The police power, however well intended, has its constitutional limits. A half century ago, Justice Holmes, speaking for the majority of the U.S. Supreme Court in Pennsylvania Coal vs. Mahon, [1922] 260 U.S. 393, announced the principle:

When the invocation of the state police power — albeit for a legitimate public purpose, such as public safety — impinges on private property rights in an onerous fashion, the governmental action transgresses the bounds of the police power and becomes transmuted into a governmental exercise of the power of eminent domain.

In simpler terms, the governmental act may not be upheld unless it provides for just compensation for the effective "taking" of the private property interest impaired by the regulation. While this principle has been with us for a while, lawyers well know: it's much easier to state than apply.

Exacerbating the problem is the fact that ever since the Pennsylvania Coal case, the U.S. Supreme Court has failed to speak to the issue in a pragmatically usable fashion. And so, for decades the task of fleshing out the skeletal rule of constitutional law fell to the state courts and the lower federal courts.

In today's world, the ideological battle lines have been drawn. On the one hand, environmentalist-minded government officials assert that we have dealt with property all wrong in the past. Such officials believe land should be treated as resource rather than commodity, and consequently its use as a resource must be strictly regulated. On the other hand, property owners point to the traditional concept of the right of user as being the principal constitutionally protected property right. They also point to their economic burdens in paying taxes on land they may be forbidden to use in an economically rewarding fashion. Thus, the stakes are high — economically, politically, and ideologically.

In this context, it is hardly surprising that the competing factions should seek resolution in the courts. These days California is a hotbed of litigation of this type. Diverse lines of authority are developing on a case-by-case basis as Californians turn to state and federal courts for relief.
Two recent California decisions illustrate the situation. In HFH Ltd. vs. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal 3d 508, the California Supreme Court was presented with a plaint of property owners who owned a five-acre parcel of land zoned for commercial use and on which they proposed to build a shopping center. Unfortunately for the owners, the local municipality, upon being presented with the plans, down-zoned the land from commercial to single-family residential. Since the property was at an intersection of two major commercial streets, this governmental act had a severe economic impact. The owners alleged that the market value of their property tumbled from $400,000 to $75,000. They therefore argued that under the constitutional principle of the Pennsylvania Coal case, the down-zoning worked a "taking" of their property because of the severity of the economic impact. The California Supreme Court disagreed. It held that if the ordinance in question was a valid exercise of the police power, its economic consequences were not compensable, even though severe. The owners' remedy would be to pursue an action seeking a writ of mandate to declare the regulation invalid, i.e., unconstitutional as confiscatory. The owners, however, would not be permitted to recover damages by inverse condemnation.

The court left open a more difficult question not presented in this case: whether an action in inverse condemnation would lie where a regulation deprives the land owner of all reasonable use of his property.

As it turned out, far from resolving the issue predictably, the HFH case became only a prelude to uncertainty. Close on its heels came Eldridge vs. City of Palo Alto (1976) 57 Cal App 3d 613. In this instance, the city of Palo Alto enacted a complex, environmentally-minded ordinance intended to preserve the foothills above the city as open space. Actually the city's desire was to convert the foothills into a park but, as is so often case, the city's planning reach exceeded its economic grasp. It didn't have the money to buy the land.

The regulation that ensued limited the use of the foothill areas to one dwelling per 10 acres and further restricted the manner in which the dwellings could be built. The owners, claiming that this regulation made their property economically unviable, claimed a constitutional taking and brought an action seeking compensation. After their case was dismissed in the trial court, they appealed, with the Court of Appeal reversing the original ruling. In support of its reversal, the court articulated a theory quite different from that in the HFH case. It was not necessary, the court said, that the challenged regulation be shown invalid. On the contrary, the court believed that a valid regulation can nonetheless affect the regulated property so severely as to constitute a taking, and if that happens, the owners' remedy would be to seek what the constitution promises, i.e., just compensation. The case was remanded for a trial. Since Eldridge followed just after the HFH decision, many knowledgeable observers of this area of the law were convinced that the Supreme Court would grant hearing and pass on this theory itself. However, the Supreme Court granted hearing only for the limited purpose of remanding the case back to the Court of Appeal for reconsideration in light of HFH. The Court of Appeal did reconsider, and it reached precisely the same decision on the same theoretical grounds as it had on the first consideration. At this point the California Supreme Court declined to hear the matter further.

And so, California law on the controversial "taking issue" remains at this time less clear than one might wish. Government entities rely on the HFH case and argue that it is a Supreme Court decision. Land owners rely on Eldridge and point out that it is the most recent decision that the Supreme Court declined to review further.

In the meantime, numerous interesting cases of this type are wending their way through the lower courts and raising the hope of more definitive adjudication before very long.

Gideon Kanner, a member of the Loyola Law School faculty since 1974, teaches courses in Property Law, Eminent Domain, and Appellate Advocacy. A frequent lecturer in the area of law dealing with eminent domain, inverse condemnation, and land use, Kanner is a former chairman of the Los Angeles County Bar Association Committee on Condemnation Procedures. Professor Kanner is a past president (1972-74) of the California Academy of Appellate Lawyers.
The Class Reunion. A time for renewing friendships, for comparing notes, for trading (and perhaps embellishing) tales, or for simply remembering. Whatever the motivation, a quick survey of recent Law School class reunions show that those attending the festivities enjoyed themselves thoroughly, and haven't aged a bit!

Members from the Class of 1951 gathered last December for their 25th reunion. The event, billed as a "Grand Celebration and 25-Year Reunion," took place in Quon Brothers Grand Star Restaurant in New Chinatown. Joseph Montoya coordinated the arrangements for the occasion.

Friendships were rekindled at the Class of 1956 reunion held last fall in the Van Nuys home of Mr. and Mrs. David Daar. Plans for the 20-year celebration were coordinated by classmate Arnold Stone. Members of the class committee included Bebette Gualano Coleman, David Daar, Tom and Constance Ferguson, George Goffin, James Radnich, and Henry Workman.

The '56 class reunion was such a success that Stone spearheaded plans for the May 1977 combined reunion of the Classes of 1956, 1957 and 1958. The Daars again served as hosts for the three-year gathering. Thomas Workman, Jr. '57 was chairman. Committee members for the triple class reunion were John Brink '57; Bebette Gualano Coleman '56; Robert Dahl '58; the Hon. Richard Gadbois, Jr. '58; William Jennett '58; Robert Lentz '56; Arnold Stone '56 and Henry Workman '56.

A decade since graduation was the reason to celebrate for members of the Class of 1967. The ten-year reunion party took place in the La Canada home of Pat ‘67 and John Phillips. Dennis Burke was chairman of this class reunion committee which included Jerry Berger, Barry Harlan, Dene Langford, Myles Mattenson, Hon. Richard Montes, Edgar Scheck, Peter Sullivan and Pat Phillips.

Recent Graduates Await Bar Results; Others Celebrate

Few can experience so acutely the true definition of the word “commencement” as did the 361 graduates of Loyola Law School last June when they received their diplomas at a ceremony on the Westchester campus of Loyola Marymount University. The Class of 1977 successfully completed the necessary law courses; enjoyed basking in the glory of family pride on Graduation Day; and truly began towards their chosen professions in law. For even as a few rainclouds loomed on that otherwise sunny commencement day, the upcoming California State Bar Examination slated for late July hovered over the horizon for the majority of the graduates.

So as they sipped the reception champagne and posed for family pictures, most of the graduates knew that Commencement 1977 was truly a start on the road to becoming attorneys. “I had to take time out for graduation in between studying for my Bar exam review class,” said one robed grad.

Perhaps if the new graduates knew the results of the Spring 1977 California Bar Examination, their worries would be allayed. Of the 59 Loyola Law School graduates who took the examination in the spring for the first time, 91.5 percent passed.

In comparison, nearly 64 percent of all law school graduates taking the examination for the first time passed and approximately 74 percent of the graduates of California law schools approved by the American Bar Association, who took the examination for the first time, passed.

The passing rate by Loyola graduates has steadily increased each year. California State Bar results indicated that 84 percent of the Loyola graduates who took the California exam in July 1976 for the first time passed on their initial attempt.

Sweet Success—Loyola Law School Alumni Andrew Stites '76, left, and Steven Brunette '76 are celebrating their passing the July 1976 Bar Examination at a reception held last February for Loyola graduates in honor of that accomplishment.
Law Review Celebrates Tenth Anniversary

The Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review marked its tenth anniversary with a party last spring in the Hancock Park home of Mr. and Mrs. Maynard J. Toll, parents of Janet T. Davidson ’78, a member of the Review’s 1976-77 editorial board. Mr. Toll is also a member of the Law School’s Board of Visitors.

Some 70 former editors and faculty members were introduced to this year’s board by the outgoing editors. According to Gary J. Singer ’77, former editor-in-chief, the event was intended to gather those associated with the Review for a social occasion and to renew the interest of former editors in the publication and its future projects.

Printed four times a year, the Review publishes more than 1,000 pages annually. The publication is received by the Law School’s 1,300 students, 600 subscribers and the libraries of law schools across the country. It contains articles by judges, attorneys, and faculty members as well as contributions by outstanding students.

Singer notes that although the Review is relatively young, there is a high level of expertise in its content which continues to increase with each successive year. A recent issue’s articles on the new California Corporation law have been cited by a number of authorities in corporate law in their works.

Singer says that the editorial board members hope for increased subscriptions, greater interest in submitting editorial contributions, and support from those associated with the Review in the past.

Retiring from their editorial positions at the close of the academic year were Barbara Kheel ’77 and Walter Lipsman ’77, articles editors; Lora Lee Moore ’77, managing editor; J. Michael Dwyer ’77, chief Ninth Circuit editor; Janet Davidson ’78 and Peter Gordon ’77, Ninth Circuit editors; Patricia Stems ’77, chief note and comment editor; Marianne Huesman ’78, Jason Landess ’77, Stephen Reid ’77 and John Richmond ’77, note and comment editors; and Singer.

The 1977-78 board includes Charles Crouch ’78, editor-in-chief; Pam Duffy ’78, Karen Growdon ’78 and Mark Mikukka ’78, articles editors; Susan Knowles ’78, chief note and comment editor; Carol Boyk ’78 and Tom Newmeyer ’78, note and comment editors; Glen Kulik ’78, chief Ninth Circuit editor; Cathy Hagen ’78 and Steve Johnson ’78, Ninth Circuit editors; Lyn Maloney ’78, managing editor; Greg Goff ’78, business editor.

Professor Harry S. Laughran, faculty advisor of the Review for nine years was among those attending the event.

Those interested in subscribing to the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review should write c/o Law Review Office, Loyola Law School, or telephone 213380-8794. Yearly subscription rate is $14.00.

St. Thomas More Law Society Honors Leonard Janofsky

Leonard S. Janofsky, a partner in the law firm of Paul, Hastings, Janofsky and Walker [Los Angeles], is the 1977 recipient of the Medallion of Merit presented by the St. Thomas More Law Society at the group’s annual breakfast event held last spring at the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Honored for his outstanding contribution to the legal profession, Janofsky served as president of the Los Angeles County Bar Association from 1968 to 1969 and the State Bar of California from 1972 to 1973. He is currently chairman of a special committee on judicial evaluation.

for the Los Angeles County Bar Association.

Janofsky was introduced by his friend and fellow member of the evaluation committee, Francis M. Wheat, a partner in the law firm of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher [Los Angeles]. Coordinating the breakfast was Robert J. Reamer ’77, the president of St. Thomas More Society for the past academic year. Also attending was Dean Fred Lower. The society is a student group organized to consider and discuss ethical, moral, social and political programs of interest in the legal profession and to provide service to the Law School.
Alumni Chapters Organized throughout California

You may be associating with more Loyola Law School alumni than you realize. When the Class of 1977 graduated from the Law School in June, the Alumni Association reached an enrollment of more than 4,000 members.

Because of the rapid increase in the number of graduates during the past few years, Alumni Association chapters are more important than ever for keeping in touch with your law school.

Eighteen chapters, scattered throughout California, are in various stages of formation. The purpose of these regional organizations is to communicate to alumni current Law School developments, needs, and plans. Alumni are urged to reciprocate with ideas and support.

Members of the Law School staff will be meeting with chapters on an annual basis. Each group will have the opportunity to provide career planning and placement assistance for other Loyola Law School graduates and to assist with The Advocates, our annual support group. The individual chapters will also foster geographic camaraderie among Loyola graduates.

The chapters which have already been established and the respective presidents are:

He was also appointed a consultant to the Drug Abuse Council in Washington, D.C. to assess impact of alternatives for decriminalization of heroin.

Christopher N. May has been appointed to a 15-member committee to evaluate a Small Claims Court Experimental Project by the State Department of Agriculture and Services. The committee will look into ways of encouraging the better use of small claims courts by the general public.

Joel I. Edelman has been elected chairperson of the State Board of Behavioral Science Examiners. He was appointed a public member of the Board by Governor Edmund G. Brown, Jr. in 1976 and is the first Brown-appointed public member to be elected chairperson of a Department of Consumer Affairs regulatory board. Edelman is also Deputy City Attorney.

Walter R. Trinkaus was a panel member for a session on "Foundations of Law and Ethics Regarding Death" at an Oct. 4 conference sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. On Nov. 15, Professor Trinkaus chaired a session on "The Present Public Policy Regarding Death and Alternatives" to be held at Loyola Law School and sponsored by the NCCJ.

Gideon Kanner has had a number of speaking engagements in the recent past. In June, he spoke to the American Right of Way Association in Honolulu. During July, he was a speaker at the Land Use Seminar in San Francisco, sponsored by the Pacific Legal Foundation and the Catholic University. He also co-authored an article with Sonya B. Molho '77 entitled "Urban Renewal: Laissez-Faire for the Poor, Welfare for the Rich," 8 Pacific Law Journal 627. In August, he addressed the International Convention of Society of Real Estate Appraisers in Anaheim.

Ray Decker Resumes Studies

The Rev. Raymond G. Decker, former Assistant Dean of Admissions for the Law School, is now a Scholar in Residence at Harvard Law School for the 1977-78 academic year.

Ray, as the well-liked Father Decker was called around the Law School, started the research position on September 1 at the invitation of David N. Smith, Dean for International Legal Studies at Harvard Law School. His plans include further historical research on the relationship between religion and legal institutions. A specialist in religion and the law, Father Decker earned his Ph.D. degree in those combined areas under an interdisciplinary arrangement with the University of California, Berkeley (Boalt Hall) and the Graduate Theological Union.

Brig. Gen. Nathan J. Roberts, U.S. Army (Ret.) and Mrs. Roberts of Santa Barbara took an extensive world tour following his retirement last semester from Loyola Law School. Their itinerary included several continents with a special stop in New Zealand for a 35-mile hiking trip.

Gen. Roberts, who served as Assistant Judge Advocate General of the U.S. Army and who is a recipient of the Legion of Merit with two Oak Leaf Clusters, retired as a professor on the Law School faculty after an 11-year association with Loyola. Margaret (Peg) Roberts, who is a trained pilot, is an author who has recently completed a young people's book on California history.

The Roberts were feted at a reception in honor of his retirement at Michael's Restaurant in Los Angeles. The Law School faculty presented the General with the deluxe, gold-leaf edition of Milestones: 200 Years of American Law.
