THE DEAN'S SUMMATION

Frederick J. Lower, Jr.
Dean, Loyola University School of Law

In the six months I have served as Dean, I have reflected on the fact that the Law School has various constituencies. There are faculty members, students, members of the Bench and Bar, potential admittees, the community at large and of course, Alumni.

Last June, as I was writing down a few thoughts for the graduation ceremony, it occurred to me that the ranks of faculty, administrators and students are subject to change, but it is the graduate who is permanently cast into the "Alumnus" mold at commencement. There are now approximately 3,000 of us who share the permanent status of a Loyola Law School Alumnus.

As Alumni it is important that each of us remember we are the beneficiaries of the work and dedication of those who have gone before. For example, both Father Donovan and Mrs. Sidney Graybeal Morgan have retired and are no longer regularly serving the Law School. How many of us remember the contributions of Professor Becker and Cook? Both have now been called from us. Many remember Professor Dorsey who resigned this year to teach in another state. This list is by no means exhaustive, but it illustrates that we Alumni must remember we have benefited from the dedicated service of others.

Memories, for some of us, likewise will include recollections of the days and evenings spent at the Grand Avenue location. Others have only known a Loyola Law School at the present location. Recollections of each graduating class change from year to year as our Law School is experiencing change, development and growth.

Speaking of growth, those of us who graduated when the Law School was located on Grand Avenue may be interested in knowing that in June of 1973, 350 graduates received the Juris Doctor degree. This number is slightly larger than the entire student body when the school was located on Grand Avenue.

The size of the graduating class mirrors the increased enrollment and the necessary enlargement of full-time faculty. In September approximately 1300 students registered and we welcomed eight new faculty members. Our Law School now has 35 full-time and 33 adjunct faculty. Numbers alone, however, fail to say anything truly significant about a Law School. An important measure of the excellence of any professional school is in its faculty.

As the major goal of our Law School is to prepare students for the practice of law, we have sought faculty who have actively practiced law, most often in the specialized areas in which they will teach. Many members of our faculty continue to practice law on a limited basis, as consultants to governmental agencies and of course to the practicing bar. At the same time, we recognize that law does not exist in a vacuum, and other disciplines have much to offer those seriously interested in the study of law. We have thus sought to balance our faculty with those well-versed in related academic disciplines. The Adjunct Faculty gives the Law School access to the expertise of the practicing Bar and Bench for the teaching of highly specialized courses.

The entrance qualifications of applicants for admission continue to climb. Many of the Alumni have recommended top applicants contribution because sound students are the life blood of a Law School. We are now receiving seven or eight applications for each seat in the entering class.

This edition of the Loyola Lawyer is the first of a series of three annual publications directed to the Loyola Law Alumni, I would like it to be not just a means of communicating developments to you, but rather it should offer an opportunity and a place where there can be an exchange of ideas and information. With this in mind, information and letters from Alumni are solicited. Please feel welcome to write or call me or John Willis, Director of Law School Development—(213) 776-4870.

In this first report I wanted to inform you of the general growth of our Law School. In subsequent editions of the Loyola Lawyer, I will report on more specific developments including land acquisition and plans for new programs.
LOYOLA LAW SCHOOL LIBRARY
FASTEST GROWING IN NATION

Loyola University School of Law Library has the fastest rate of growth of bound volumes of any Law School Library in the United States, according to Richard Rank, Law Librarian and Professor of Law at Loyola University School of Law. In 1963, there were 38,000 volumes in the Law Library, which ranked Loyola in Los Angeles ninety-third in Law Libraries of the nation. Today there are 156,000 bound volumes which gives Loyola a rank of thirtieth among the Law Libraries of the one hundred forty-five accredited Law Schools in the United States.

The annual growth rate has been 11,800 volumes. In California only the Law Libraries of UC at Berkeley, UCLA and Stanford have more bound volumes than Loyola.

Much of this increase has been due to the leadership of Professor Rank and his dedicated staff, which now includes seventeen full-time and forty part-time members. Mr. Rank, a native of Estonia, came to the United States in 1952, where he taught at Cornell. At Cornell he became interested in the field of Law Libraries.

The Loyola Law Library has one of the most extensive collections of city zone and planning that can be found in any Law School. Collections also include numerous volumes on International Law, Comparative Law and legal documents concerned with human rights. Loyola Law School is one of ten Law Schools that offer courses on African Law.

The Library also subscribes to all leading English language legal periodicals published in the world. In addition, the Law Library subscribes to many legal periodicals in German, French, Italian and Russian. There are over 1100 such periodicals received by the Library on a regularly basis.

Professor Rank says that the average cost of a law book is about twenty dollars. The assets of Loyola Law Library are now worth over three million dollars.

Mr. Rank’s goals are to develop the Law Library into a top ranking legal-research center that will attract students and professors doing legal research.

In addition to Rank’s professional interests, he has a colorful background in sports. In Estonia he engaged in inter-collegiate athletics. He participated in swimming the 1500 meter freestyle, was middle-weight boxing champion, and holds a world’s record in rifle marksmanship for small caliber rifles. Estonia was the recipient of the Argentine Trophy awarded by Argentina to the best nation in marksmanship. Estonia had this honor in 1938 and 1939.

Professor Rank died Christmas day 1973 from a heart attack. The above story already had gone to print. His efforts on behalf of the Library have made lasting contributions to Loyola University School of Law.

The support of the Advocates makes possible the continued enrollment of Loyola University School of Law.
DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT APPOINTED FOR LAW SCHOOL

Richard Mason, Vice President for University Relations Loyola Marymount University, announced in September the appointment of John Willis, Jr., as Director of Development related to the Loyola University School of Law.

Willis has had extensive experience in the development field, including twenty years with the YMCA in various administrative and development responsibilities.

Dean Lower said one of Willis' efforts will be to increase Alumni participation in the Advocates.

PARKING BUILDING COMPLETED

In May a four-hundred-car parking building was completed and is now being used by the students. Munro, Jackson and Burns were the contractors for the much needed addition to the facilities at Loyola University Law School. The parking fee for the students is $35 per semester.

Elizabeth Robards, Administrative Secretary for the Law School Faculty, opens the gate to the parking lot for third year law student, Mike.

Professor Thomas Scully, Director of Specialty Legal Clinics, talking with third year Law students Manuel Ramirez, David Yamada, Wayne Robertshaw and Liz Goorgian.

Branconier and Rosie Orneras, who work in the Registrar's Office. Mike is a student worker and plans to practice criminal law.
FACULTY BRIEFS

Professor Malvina N. Guggenheim participated in the Criminal Law Workshop at New York University in August 1973. At the same program Guggenheim attended the International Association of Penal Law. Much of this program concerned drug abuse throughout the world.

Professor Quentin Ogren attended an International Conference at Sussex, England. It was concerned with democratic controls on the legislative process. He reports seventy delegates from fourteen countries. The conference provided new insights into comparative government. The conference was sponsored by the British Foreign Office.

Professor Leslie S. Rothenberg was at the University of Colorado in August attending the Law Teaching Clinic, sponsored by The Association of American Law Schools. Rothenberg is co-author of an article entitled "Appeals and Writs in Family Law Cases" published by the Los Angeles County Bar Family Law Section for their Family Symposium.

Professor Gerald A. Cavanaugh attended the Annual Conference of Law School Admissions Officers in June.

FACULTY ON LEAVE FOR THE 73-74 SCHOOL YEAR

Professor Tony Ching is Chief Counsel to the Hawaii Legal Services Project.

Professor Curt Garbesi is at the University of New South Wales Law School in Australia for one year. He was instrumental in the founding of that law school.

Professor Tim Kennedy is a visiting professor at the McGeorge School of Law of the University of the Pacific.

Dean Leo O'Brien is at the Hastings School of Law of the University of California.

Professor Martha Robinson is on sabbatical for extended travel and study.

RESIGNATIONS

Professor William H. Dorsey, Jr., accepted a teaching assignment at Williamette University College of Law in Salem, Oregon.

Professor Tony McDermott has returned to the practice of law.
